Comprehensive Rodent Control Program In Place

New Health Commissioner: City Making Progress, More Work Remains To Be Done

By SCOTT JACKSON

Ruth Jones, Quincy's new health commissioner, said the city has made progress in its battle against rats, but more work remains to be done.

The Health Department has hired an inspector solely focused on keeping rats in check. A new comprehensive program that includes the use of a product intended to stop the rodents from reproducing in addition to continued use of poison and dry ice to kill the vermin is also in place.

"We have a big focus on a comprehensive program that we're dealing with to hopefully enhance the control of rats," Jones said recently. "You're never going to 100 percent get rid of rats – they're part of the ecosystem – but we need to put it

Councillors Hear Presentation On Higher Education Costs

By SCOTT JACKSON

An expert in financial literacy stressed the importance of teaching high schoolers about student loans and paying for higher education before their senior year when they are facing tough decisions about where to go to college.

Would-be college students, he added, should also consider state schools and community colleges as a way to reduce their student loan debt.

George Blount, managing partner and head of behavioral economics at nBalance Financial, gave a presentation on student loans during a meeting of the City Council's education committee April 18. The committee held the presentation in recognition of financial literacy month.

Blount noted only 17 states require financial literacy courses as the part of the curriculum in high school and 22 states require high school classes to incorporate lessons on economics. Massachusetts, he said, recommends personal finance courses but does not require them.

Time For A New Police Station, Chief Says

Quincy police headquarters has outlived its useful life, Police Chief Paul Keenan said Monday. The building is not handicap accessible and its elevator is unreliable, the HVAC system fails to keep the building warm in the winter and cool in the summer, the roof allows water to seep in, the lockup is so old that a number of cells are closed because of plumbing issues that cannot be fixed, the evidence room is bursting at the seams and there is no proper ventilation system

63-Unit Condo Proposed For Wollaston Theater Site

Community Meeting 7 P.M. Thursday At QHS

By SCOTT JACKSON

The owner of the land on which the Wollaston Theater once sat is proposing to build a six-story, 63-unit condominium building on site.

Ward 5 Councillor Kirsten Hughes will host a community meeting on the proposal Thursday at 7 p.m. inside the auditorium of Quincy High School, 100 Coddington St.

Miao Kun "Michael" Fang plans to invest upwards of $20 million in Wollaston Center. Fang's proposal would re-develop the former Wollaston Theater site at 10 Beale St., which has sat vacant since it was demolished in 2016. Fang said he hopes to leverage existing MBTA infrastructure and work in tandem with the city's efforts to revitalize and redevelop Wollaston Center.

"This project has the potential to be a centerpiece to Wollaston's economic revival," Fang said in a statement. "I look forward to working with the city and the neighborhood in their efforts to reimagine and redevelop Wollaston Center. The neighborhood's Red Line stop makes it prime for revival and makes it perfect for the inclusion of transit-oriented living."

The proposal calls for 73,000 square feet of residential development on the site of the former Wollaston Theater. Plans call for 63 "for sale" condominium units in a six-story building. The project would include 29 one-bedroom units and 34 two-bedroom units, according to Fang's attorney, Robert Harnais.

The project also includes a private gym and Fang plans to utilize memorabilia from the former theater in the building's lobby.

"The magnitude of redeveloping such an iconic site is not lost on me," Fang said. "This project needs be a catalyst for economic development but will also maintain some past history. This plan will add a significant amount of patronage to Wollaston's local business community that can push Wollaston's renewal forward."

The parcel at 10 Beale St. includes 18,790 square feet of land in a Business C zoning district, according to the city assessors' online database. The project is subject to review by the city's Planning Board and Zoning Board of Appeals.

The Wollaston Theatre last opened its doors to the public in 2003. The building opened in 1926 and was home to a vaudeville theater before being converted to a cinema in the 1930s.

Fang purchased the property for $600,000 in 2012 from Yvonne Chandler. Chandler and her late husband, Arthur, had owned the Wollaston Theater since 1979.

Prior to selling the site to Fang, Chandler had reached an agreement in 2009 to sell the building to StreetWorks, the city's previous master developer for Quincy Center. The New York-based company exercised an option to opt out of that agreement after it was estimated that renovating the building would cost upwards of $7 million.

30th 'Cleaner, Greener Quincy' May 4

The 30th annual "Cleaner, Greener Quincy" citywide cleanup will be held Saturday, May 4. The cleanup will take place from 9 a.m. to noon.

Mayor Thomas Koch is seeking community volunteers to participate in this year's cleanup at parks and open spaces throughout the city. The mayor will host an appreciation cookout following the cleanup at Pageant Field.

In past years, thousands of volunteers have cleaned school grounds, parks, playgrounds, marshes, and open space areas. Volunteers have planted flowers, shrubs, and trees. Countless yards of mulch have been spread and weeds and winter debris removed. Each year, this event has served as Quincy's community-wide "spring-cleaning."

"Quincy remains a beautiful place to live in part because of our residents' commitment to keep it looking beautiful," Koch said. "Whether it be their own properties or pitching in for community events like Cleaner, Greener Quincy, we have thousands of people committed to helping Quincy stay beautiful. As someone who has seen this program up close for each of its 30 years, I am extremely grateful for the hard work our resident put forth."

The City Department of Natural Resources (Park, Forestry, Cemetery, Recreation and Conservation) will support community groups interested in helping out by providing tools, mulch, bags, gloves and other supplies. Interested parties can form their own groups or join other established groups at locations around the city.

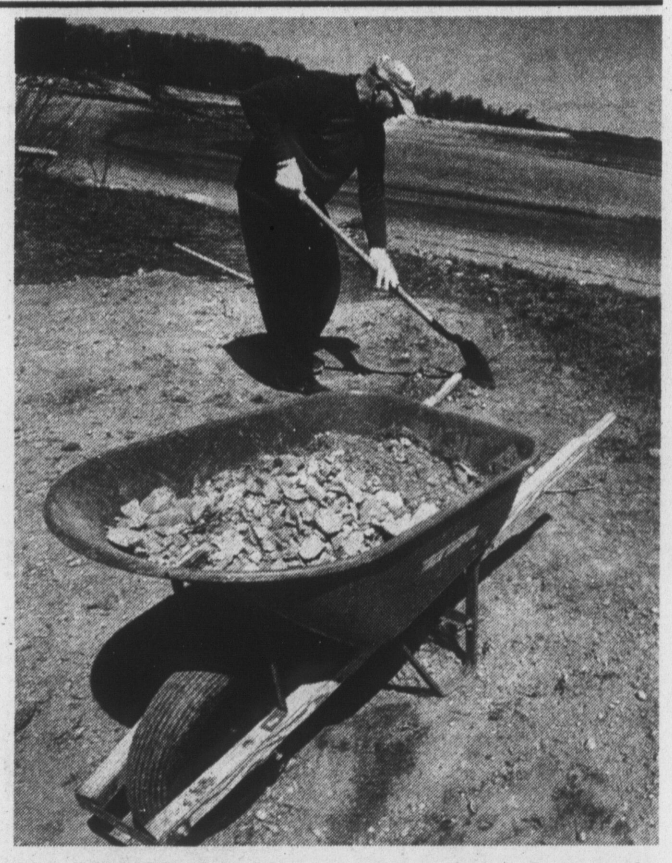
For more information, call Program Manager Paul Doherty at (617) 376-1251 or email Paul at pdoherty@quincyma.gov.

The first 1,500 volunteers will receive a commemorative 30th anniversary Cleaner, Greener Quincy t-shirt. The shirts are sponsored by the Quincy Parks Conservancy, a local non-profit that advocates for our parks and open space areas.

Cleaner, Greener Quincy was started by then-Mayor Jim Sheets as a way to get the community involved in the upkeep of our park system. Since then, it has created a generation of stewards that take an active interest in the condition and appearance of our public park system.

It is estimated that Cleaner, Greener Quincy has generated more than 250,000 community volunteer hours since its inception. It has reached more than 60 different locations throughout neighborhoods of the city.

"The most important component of Cleaner, Greener is getting our young people invested in their community," Koch said. "These youngsters take an active interest in keeping their neighborhood parks and playgrounds in great shape. That has tremendous value to the future of our city."



JOE CONNOR of the Merrymount Association cleans up the winter debris along Merrymount Beach on Cleaner Greener Day last May. This year's cleanup is set for Saturday, May 4.

Wollaston Urban Revitalization Summary Available To Public

The Summary of Public Engagement Report from the Wollaston Urban Revitalization District Community Planning Session is available to the public from the meeting held this winter at Central Middle School.

More than 200 members of the community took part in a workshop Dec. 4 led by BSC Group, an independent consultant. Input was solicited from the public to create a vision of strategic revitalization for the City of Quincy's Wollaston neighborhood.

Ten overarching themes emerged from the public data collected. Information included a desire to weave sustainability, accessibility and green infrastructure concepts, including electric car stations, bike sharing and bike and pedestrian accommodations keeping in mind the history of the neighborhood. The community seeks to celebrate Wollaston's cultural diversity and attract more locally owned business, shops and offer affordable, mixed use and age 55 plus living as well as neighborhood entertainment/recreation options.

"The heart of our City is community. A neighborhood revitalization plan is a community driven approach to redevelopment," said Mayor Thomas Koch. "The ideas gleamed from this summary help drive the next steps in planning."

The full Summary of Public Engagement is available at quincyma.gov.

SPRING GREEN

The goddesses must have decided the spring month of May should have emerald as its birthstone. This lovely gemstone, second only to diamond for its rarity, is thought to have been mined as early as 330 BC by the Egyptians. Emerald is the symbol of rebirth and youth, and although it comes in a range of shades, deep green is the most desirable. The name emerald derives from the Greek word for green. Cleopatra was a big fan and declared that all the emerald mines in Egypt belonged to her exclusively. However, she was not the only "royal" personage to consider emeralds special. Hollywood's own royalty, Elizabeth Taylor, possessed a fabulous emerald pendant that sold for $6.5 million in 2011.

If you are shopping for an emerald for someone special with a May birthday, we'd love to show you our collection of one-of-a-kind custom designs at Rogers Jewelry. Being knowledgeable about gemstones is one thing, but when you are making an investment in gemstone jewelry of any kind, you need a trained professional. Fine jewelry cannot be judged on appearance alone, which is why the experience, ethics, and credentials of your jeweler are so important. It's always fun to visit at 1402 Hancock St. in Quincy Center. PH: 617-773-3636. Filmmaker To Screen His New Children's Rights Documentary

At Broad Meadows Middle School Friday At 7 P.M.

Broad Meadows Middle School in Quincy will host a screening of "Children of Bal Ashram," a new children's rights documentary co-produced by acclaimed filmmaker/activist Len Morris on Friday, April 26th at 7 p.m. in the school auditorium, 50 Calvin Rd.

The public is invited.

The "Children of Bal Ashram" has been screened only twice before. "Children of Bal Ashram" was screened in March at the Martha's Vineyard Film Festival and in April at the Arizona Film Festival.

Len Morris will attend. There will be a Q+A with Morris following the April 26th Quincy screening.

The documentary follows rescued child laborers at a school in India established by the husband and wife team of Kailash Satiyarthi and Sumedha.

Kailash is a 2014 Nobel Peace Prize Laureate.

Morris said he selected Broad Meadows as a screening venue for two reasons.

First, they have worked closely together through ODW-USA. In 1998, Broad Meadows Middle School students co-founded an after school, global service learning project now called ODW-USA. Nine schools are members. Member schools are in MA, NJ, VT and AR.

Now in its 20th year, ODW-USA members vote in November each school year to select and partner with a reputable anti-child labor organization to collaborate for a year to raise funds for the education of rescued child laborers. ODW-USA student members voted in 2013 and again this school year to partner with Len Morris to support the education of rescued child laborers in Kenya at "The Kenyan School House Project" which Len co-founded years ago.

Morris's "Kenyan School House Project" was selected this year by students as ODW's "Charity of the Year." This year's ODW partnership with Morris will specifically support the continued educations of 22 rescued child laborers (most of them girls) through Len's "Kenyan School House Project." Students voted to partner with Morris not only to support his "Kenyan School House Project," but also to support his awareness raising anti-child labor documentaries such as Children of Bal Ashram. Learn more at www.odw-usa.org.

Second, filmmaker Len Morris has worked closely with Kailash and Sumedha for over 20 years. The Broad Meadows students over those 20 years also worked shoulder to shoulder with Kailash and Sumedha on various anti-child labor campaigns such as: The Global March Against Child Labor; The 100 Million Campaign to Free 100 Million Child Laborers; The Online March Against Child Labor; and more. Kailash and Broad Meadows student spokespeople were co-presenters at an AFT/NEA sponsored summer institute for educators titled: Teaching Child Labor and more.

Morris's latest film, "Children of Bal Ashram," looks closely at Kailash, Sumedha, their anti-child labor activism and the resiliency of rescued child laborers in their care at Bal Ashram, a refuge in Rajasthan, India, at which rescued child laborers are provided a home, family, healing, hope and education.

In summary, Morris said he chose Broad Meadows Middle School in Quincy for the third screening site as a way to honor the Broad Meadows' students' years and years of after school global activism for global peers. He and the Broad Meadows students have much in common. They both go beyond caring to action.

"Children of Bal Ashram" is Morris's fourth documentary about global child labor, its causes, its horrors and the hopes for ways to end child labor.

The public can help. Donations can be made payable to "ODW" and mailed to ODW, 8 Coolidge Ave., Weymouth, MA 02188.

Sheila McIntyre Dedicated Her Life To Helping Those In Need

The City of Quincy lost a caretaker this week. Our thoughts are with the McIntyre family as we mourn the loss of this wonderful woman who dedicated so much of her time and energy to helping those in Quincy and beyond who needed a helping hand.

Sheila played a key role in the development of Father Bill's Place in Quincy, which to this day remains a supportive place of refuge for our neighbors experiencing homelessness. It was because of Sheila's strong commitment to veterans and her neighbors in need that we dedicated our first permanent supportive housing property in her name.

For more than 20 years, Sheila McIntyre House on Burgin Parkway has been home to eight formerly homeless veterans. We feel tremendously grateful to carry on her legacy in this way.

A Sad Day For Quincy

The passing of Quincy's former First Lady Sheila McIntyre is a sad day to all who knew her and to the entire Quincy community. She along with her husband Jim McIntyre were part of Quincy's political history.

I first met these two people at my grandfather's wake and funeral. At that time McIntyre wore two hats, mayor and state senator. My uncle George Harrington was part of the Democratic crew who turned Quincy into a Democratic stronghold. My uncle being from Charlestown always loved politics and he learned it in Charlestown, the real Kennedy School of Politics.

I can remember shortly after moving to Quincy when Mayor McIntyre died so young. Over the years I met up with Sheila from time to time and she always remembered that I was Irene and George Harrington's nephew.

Sheila McIntyre was one classy lady and she and her husband took Quincy quite far. Today's growth in this city started back with McIntyre was mayor and has never stopped. This will be part of the McIntyre legacy forever.

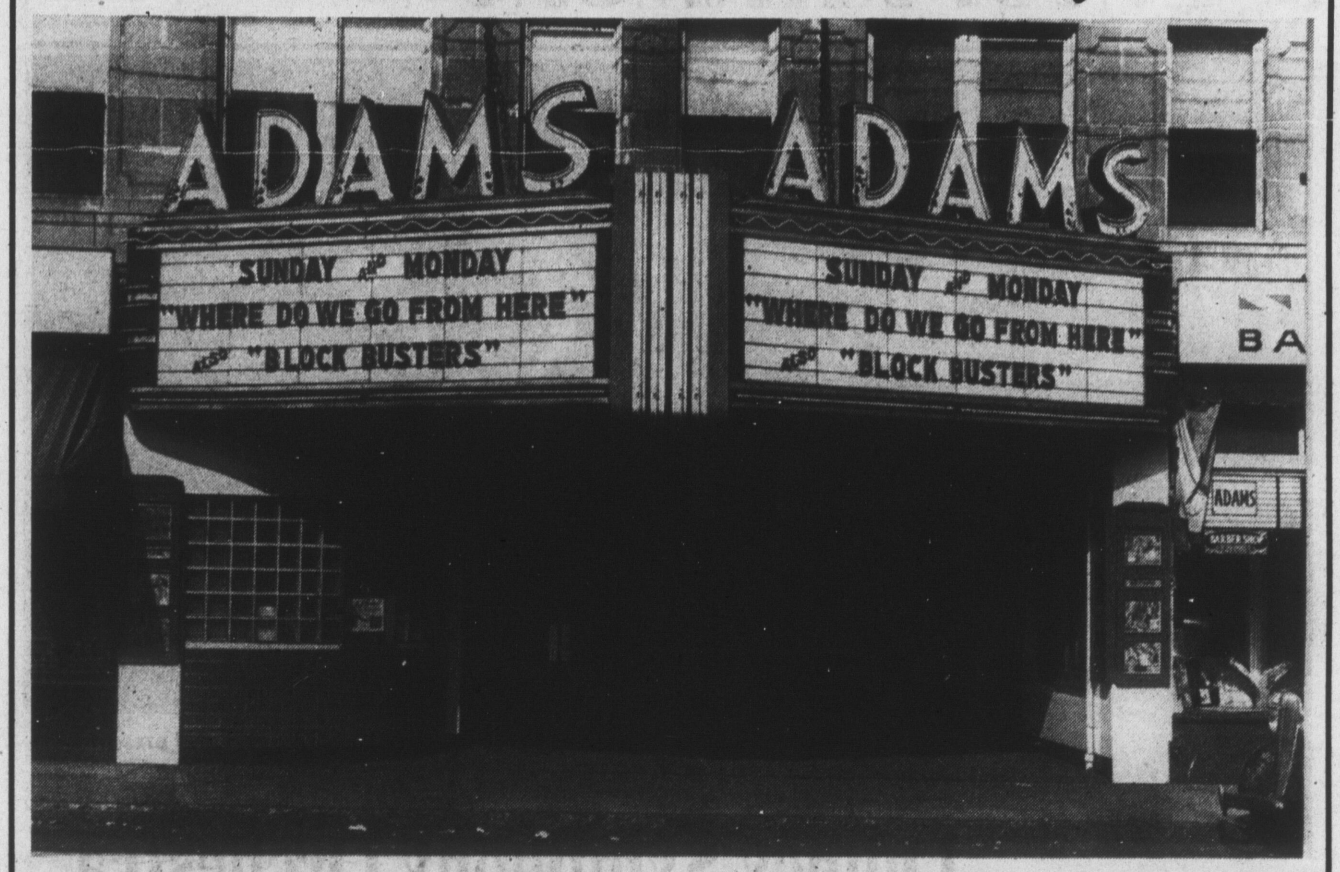
Scenes From Yesterday



THIS IS A 1948 real photo postcard reproduction showing the Adams Theater that was at 15 School St. in Quincy Center across from today's Firestone store. When built in 1932, this was known as the Plymouth Building with apartments on the top floor. The theater space shown here was home for a few years to the Capital Garage that sold and serviced Packard automobiles. In 1934, after the garage was moved out and until the start of World War II, this space was used by the Quincy Arena and was the site of amateur and semi-pro boxing and wrestling matches. The Adams Theater opened here after the Arena closed and it was open for almost 20 years. On Saturday afternoons admission was only five cents. On the right was the Adams Barber Shop and the Art Studios was on the left.

Nolan Walker Nominated To Two Service Academies

Congressman Stephen F. Lynch, D-Boston, announces the nomination of Nolan Walker of Quincy for appointment to the United States Military Academy and the United States Merchant Marine Academy.

Walker, the son of Anthony and Angela Walker, is a senior at Quincy High School.

As part of his congressional duties, Lynch nominates exemplary candidates to the service academies each year.

"These candidates are the best of the best, and I am proud of their desire to serve our country," said Lynch. "The academies graduate leaders who will guide our nation into the future and the men and women who attend the academies are entrusted with the greatest responsibility – to serve and protect the United States of America."

Walker was highly recommended by his teachers at Quincy High School.

"He is a remarkable young man, and we are fortunate that young people like Nolan are willing to serve our nation," Lynch said.

Lynch and his congressional liaison to the United States Service Academies, Bob Fowkes, examined each candidate's record of academic, athletic, and service achievements in addition to evaluating letters of recommendation. After an extensive review process and a personal interview, Walker was selected as someone whose scholastic record and community contributions elevated him to the top of a list of well-qualified candidates.

"There were many impressive candidates this year for the United States Military Academy and the United States Merchant Marine Academy," Lynch said. "Nolan stood out as a young man of keen intelligence and strong character. He is a wonderful reflection of his parents, Anthony and Angela. The Walker family, the City of Quincy, and the entire Commonwealth of Massachusetts should be proud of Nolan in this achievement."

Students interested in attending one of the United States Service Academies should contact Bob Fowkes in Congressman Lynch's Boston office at (617) 428-2000.

Thanks First Responders For Life Saving Action

On March 5th, a medical emergency required a call to 911 and a quick response.

First to arrive was Officer Bulger of the Quincy Police Department. He was quickly followed in the door by the crew of Engine 2 from the North Quincy fire station: Lt. Marshall and firefighters Garrett and Pothler. The Brewster Ambulance medics Patrick Brown and Jesse Smith were close behind.

These men all acted together in an extremely professional manner to ensure that the emergency was addressed in a timely and efficient way that proved to be truly life saving. We would like to express our sincerest gratitude to the exceptional response and professional treatment provided by this group of top notch first responders.

No Estimate For Primary Voter Turnout

Quincy voters will go to the polls on Tuesday, April 25 to vote in the state Presidential preference election, but city officials aren't even guessing about the turnout.

"We have no idea what the turnout will be like," said City Clerk John M. Gillis, who has made a habit, in the past, of estimating the total vote within five percent.

"This one is too tough to guess," Gillis said, "especially since we have no idea what the 18-20-year olds are going to do."

Those voting Republican will be asked to choose from among President Richard M. Nixon, Representatives Paul McCloskey and John Ashbrook as their Presidential favorite.

Democratic hopefuls on the ballot will include Senators Edward Muskie, George McGovern and Hubert Humphrey, city mayors Sam Yorty of Los Angeles and John Lindsay of New York City, Gov. George Wallace of Alabama and a number of other elected officials around the country.

BARRY RETIRES AS WATER SUPERINTENDENT

Former City Manager Edward T. "Red" Lewis was the keynote speaker at a retirement dinner for Water Superintendent Robert E. Barry at the Morrisette American Legion Post, West Quincy.

Mr. Barry retired after 47 years with the Quincy Public Works Department. Former DPW Commissioner Charles R. Herbert was master of ceremonies. Head table guests included Senator Arthur H. Tobin, DPW Commissioner James "Pete" Ricciuti and the Rev. Lawrence Pratt of St. John's Church.

'Fine Print' Book Review: American Pop By Snowden Wright

By BETH VACCA

Sins of the father. Not so easy to see in our own lives throughout many generations, but when written as a sweeping fictional novel in such a way that dots the i's and crosses the t's will make you think about the choices we make in the now and how they may affect our families for generations to come.

I initially picked up this book – "American Pop" by Snowden Wright – because I loved the cover (I hate admitting that I fell prey to any marketing scheme). I brought the book home because of the sticker placed on the front that read "Anne's pick". Another point for the marketers … who is Anne? I have no idea. Someone liked the book and apparently that was good enough for me.

As it turns out I do not think Anne and I read the same type of books. Thank you Anne. Whoever you are. Multi-generational family sagas are like mini series. Not very appealing to me. As a time travelling junkie, however, I couldn't help but enjoy the author jumping from one generation to the next and back again. By "jumping" between generations the reader is allowed to witness the decisions and actions of characters and then witness how those actions affected the generations to come. The butterfly effect through an American family spanning over a century.

The omniscient narrator tells the story of the Forster family's rise in (southern) American culture. The family patriarch, Houghton Forster, discovers an ingredient that when added to the newly created soda pop sold at his father's pharmacy sets their soda pop apart from the rest. Pancola becomes a household word and had the market cornered until Coca-Cola and Pepsi came on the scene.

New money married old money and brought all the pitfalls, heartache, love and triumph that goes along with each. Add in a couple of wars, political regimes rising and falling and the film industry and really anything goes. Although I knew this book was a work of fiction I had to keep checking the internet to find out what was real and what wasn't. An admission. By using the backdrop of American history this book was made so real to me I even googled Pancola to make sure it truly was the product of Wright's imagination.

Feelings are hurt. Greed and power are at the top of the menu. Children growing up blinded by their privilege. But still, through it all, love is real even though it is not the characters who fully understand, but the readers.

I will tell you the secret ingredient for Pancola is finally revealed to the reader before the end of the book. Dang it! I did not figure it out even though there were plenty of clues woven throughout the story.

So many things go unsaid within this family which is so tragically sad. Hopefully we, as readers, will be encouraged to share our own feelings with our loved ones before it is too late. We only have one life to live here on earth. Don't waste it. And don't forget to read … The Fine Print.

DOVE'S 'Diva Dance' Fundraiser May 2 At Granite Links Golf Course

DOVE (DOmestic Violence Ended) will host its annual "Diva Dance" fundraiser Thursday, May 2 from 6:30 to 10:30 p.m. at Granite Links Golf Course, 100 Quarry Hills Dr. in Quincy.

Granite Links Golf Club in Quincy will provide the setting for more than 300 partygoers, hosted by Elizabeth Hopkins (Fox 25 News). DJ Bobby & Dimitry will keep the music pumping and the dance floor full all night, so Event Chairs Linda Hooley, Nancy Keating, and Robin Jarzembowski always remind Divas to "wear comfortable shoes for dancing!"

Guests will enjoy a cash bar, heavy hors d'oeuvres, and desserts. Returning Divas will be thrilled to know that the mashed potato bar – a perennial fave – is back.

From the Wine/Balloon Pull to the live and silent auctions that promise fabulous prizes for the lucky winners, there will be numerous ways to support DOVE while treating yourself as well. In keeping with the convivial spirit of the evening, many of the auction items are perfect to share among a group of friends – from Spa Days to New Hampshire Getaways and Gourmet Dinner Parties. The bidding will be competitive, but no one will leave empty handed – this year's swag Bags will delight.

Event sponsors are a huge part of the evening's fundraising success and multiple sponsorship levels are available, including a "Life of the Party" level, new this year. With this contribution, a sponsor can support a specific part of the evening – the cocktail hour, appetizers, DJ, or desserts – and have sponsor recognition at the event podium.

Program book ads are also available at many sponsorship levels and separately.

"Divas Dance is a truly unique fundraiser. You won't be disappointed. Please contact me at 617-770-4065 x109 or Dawn.Hayes@dovema.org for sponsorship information," says DOVE Marketing and Philanthropy Director Dawn Hayes.

From simple beginnings, Divas Dance for DOVE has grown into a vital source of support for the mission to end domestic violence. It has helped DOVE expand its ability to serve its clients.

Tickets cost $75. To purchase them or to become a sponsor visit https://dovema.ejoinme.org/MyEvents/DivasDance2019/tabid/1011844/Default.aspx.

Houghs Neck Garden Club Participating In 'Art In Bloom'

Two members of the Houghs Neck Garden Club will participate in this weekend's "Art in Bloom" at the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston.

Cynthia Lewis, arranger and Zoe Antonopoulos, assistant arranger, are representing the Houghs Neck Garden Club.

This annual celebration of art and floral design draws approximately 20,000 visitors from New England and beyond. This event will run from Saturday, April 27 to Monday, April 29.

For more than 40 years, the Art in Bloom festival has paired art from across the MFA's collection with floral interpretations created by 50 New England-area garden clubs.

Each garden club team has been assigned one art object which they will interpret with a floral arrangement to be displayed next to the art. Different arrangements will be on display throughout the Museum by 50 garden clubs from across New England.

Arrangers were introduced to their art objects, which could be a painting, sculpture, piece of furniture or musical instrument, in February, and have carefully planned their floral interpretation, often based on color, shape and style. Throughout the weekend, visitors can share their best floral photos on social media with #mfaInBloom.

Art in Bloom launches with an Evening Preview of freshly installed arrangements on Friday, April 26 from 3 to 10 p.m. Daily events include tours of arrangements throughout the galleries; floral-arranging demonstrations for the home; snacks and lunch in the Art in Bloom Café among European masterpieces; and outdoor walking tours of the MFA's campus and beyond.

A Community Day with children's activities takes place on Sunday, April 28. Special Guided Group Tours are available beginning Friday evening, and free Ikebana (Japanese floral arranging) demonstrations occur on Saturday from 3 to 4 p.m. This year's featured speaker is Remco Van Vliet, celebrated Dutch florist and creative director of Van Vliet & Trap Event Design NYC.

Van Vliet will host two master classes and one lecture demonstration in floral arranging during Art in Bloom. Art in Bloom is sponsored by Wilmington Trust. Supporting Sponsors are Fitch Law Partners and Fox Hill Village. Art in Bloom Community Day is sponsored by Arbella Insurance Foundation.

Art in Bloom is included within Museum admission: $25 for adults and $23 for seniors and students age 18 and older. Admission is free for children 17 and under. Art in Bloom is presented by the MFA Associates, a group of dedicated volunteers who lead gallery tours and create the Museum's flower arrangements throughout the year.

In addition to experiencing the Art in Bloom arrangements on view througout the galleries, MFA visitors can also explore the Museum's current exhibitions, including Graciela Iturbide's Mexico; Made Visible: Contemporary South African Fashion and Identity; Postwar Visions: European Photography, 1945–60; Radical Geometries: Bauhaus Prints, 1919–33; Frida Kahlo and Arte Popular; Gender Bending Fashion; Bouchra Khalili: Poets and Witnesses; Toulouse-Lautrec and the Stars of Paris; and Georgie Friedman: Fragments of Antarctica.

Watercress With Olives, Tomatoes

By SUSIE

An aquatic plant found near springs and slow-moving streams, watercress is an often-overlooked, leafy green food source.

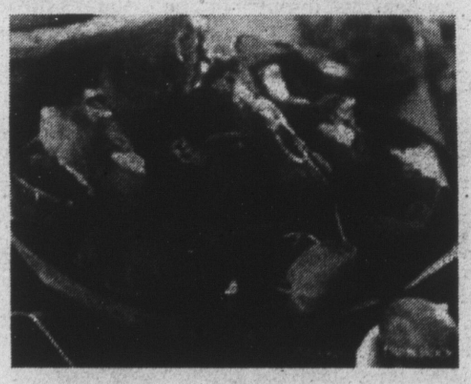
Watercress has been cultivated in Europe, Central Asia, and the Americas for millennia for use as both food and a medicine. It earned its reputation as a healing herb quite early.

Around 400 BC, Hippocrates located the first hospital on the island of Kos close to a stream to ensure that fresh watercress would be available for treating patients.

Modern science has identified more than 15 essential vitamins and minerals contained in this one herb – more iron than spinach, more calcium than milk, and more vitamin C than oranges. Vitamins A, C, and K, and phytonutrients like isothiocyanates and gluconasturtiin in watercress strengthen bones, limit neuronal damage, fight infection, help maintain healthy connective tissue, and prevent iron deficiency.

Studies have found the compound PEITC in watercress may suppress breast cancer cell development and prevent DNA damage in cells. FUN FACT: You could call watercress the first fast food. It was a free and therefore important source of sustenance throughout Europe and the US in the 19th century.

Given the nickname "poor man's bread," bunches were often rolled into a cone and eaten as an on-the-go breakfast sandwich



Anyway, here is a delicious recipe using this magical vegetable.

WATERCRESS WITH OLIVES AND TOMATOES

½ cup extra virgin olive oil
¼ cup lemon juice
2 shallots sliced thinly
¼ cup fresh oregano leaves, chopped
2 bunches watercress thick stems discarded washed well, and chopped
5 ounces mixed salad greens
1 cup sliced grape tomatoes
½ cup pitted Kalamata olives
6 ounces feta cheese
Sea salt and pepper to taste :

Make dressing in a small bowl, add shallots and oregano as well and mix. Let sit a few minutes.

Now toss together with everything else. Enjoy!

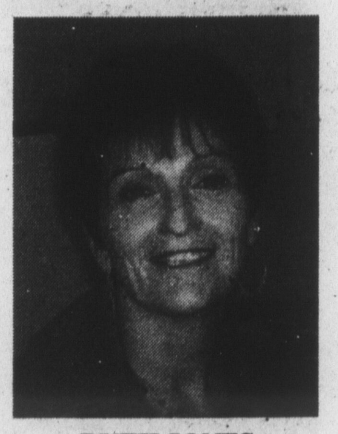
Exercise Your Brain, Body To Decrease Dimentia Risk

A Message From Ruth Jones, City Of Quincy Health Commissioner



RUTH JONES

By RUTH JONES MSPH, BSN, RN, BC, CP-FS

A long-term study conducted in Sweden has concluded that, you need to exercise both your brain and your body during middle age to guard against dementia as you grow older.

Remaining mentally active through activities like reading, playing music, sewing or painting reduces your overall risk of both dementia and Alzheimer's disease, according to the research. Simultaneously, keeping physically active seems to protect you against types of dementia linked to unhealthy blood vessels, such as vascular dementia and mixed dementia.

Lead researcher, Dr. Jenna Najar discovered that enhanced levels of mental and physical activity in midlife, independently, decreased the risk of dementia. Najar noted, that means that if you only focus on mental activities, you are not getting the brain benefits from regular physical exercise, and vice versa. When the researchers focused on the effect on the different subtypes of dementia, they discovered that higher levels of mental activity in midlife lessened the risk of Alzheimer's disease, regardless of the women's physical activity levels, while higher levels of physical activity reduced the risk of more vascular forms of dementia, regardless of how mentally active the women were.

This study evaluated 800 Swedish women who participated in the research at an average age of 47 and were tracked and monitored for 44 years. At the initiation of the study, all of the women were questioned regarding their usual mental and physical activities.

Mental activities could encompass a wide variety of intellectual, artistic and religious endeavors. Physical activity could range from light exercise such as walking or gardening, up to more strenuous activities like running or swimming.

During the course of the study, 194 women developed dementia, including 102 with Alzheimer's, 27 with vascular dementia and 41 with mixed dementia. Mixed dementia is a combination of two or more types of dementia. Investigators found that those with a high level of mental activity were 46 percent less likely to develop Alzheimer's disease and 34 percent less likely to develop any form of dementia, in comparison with women who exercised their brains the least. Meanwhile, more physically active women were 52 percent less likely to develop vascular dementia and 56 percent less likely to develop mixed dementia, compared with inactive women. These associations maintained, even after the researchers took into account other factors that influence dementia risk, such as high blood pressure, smoking and diabetes.

For years, there's been mounting evidence that lifestyle risk factors connected with development of dementia. Researchers point out the benefits of mentally invigorating activities could be related to a notion referred to as cognitive reserve. Fundamentally, by exercising your brain on a routine basis, you are building up its capacity to resist age-related decline.

For instance, Alzheimer's disease likely is caused by amyloid plaques and protein tangles that clog nerve cell connections, or synapses, even if you already have these plaques and tangles, if you have stronger synapses to begin with because you've maintained a healthy cognitive life, it may take those plaques and tangles longer to cause damage that displays as dementia.

The benefits of physical exercise are more straightforward. By improving blood vessel health, you make sure that the brain has a dependable supply of the oxygen and the energy it needs to function properly.

Ruth Jones is the health commissioner for the City of Quincy.

Drug Take Back Saturday At Quincy Police Department

The Quincy Police Department and the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration will give the public its 17th opportunity in nine years to prevent pill abuse and theft by ridding their homes of potentially dangerous expired, unused, and unwanted prescription drugs from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday.

Bring your pills for disposal to Quincy police headquarters at 1 Sea St. The service is free and anonymous, no questions asked. Sites cannot accept liquids or needles or sharps, only pills or patches.

Last fall, Americans turned in nearly 460 tons (more than 900,000 pounds) of prescription drugs at more than 5,800 sites operated by the DEA and almost 4,800 of its state and local law enforcement partners.

This initiative addresses a vital public safety and public health issue. The Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration's National Survey on Drug Use and Health shows year after year that the majority of misused and abused prescription drugs are obtained from family and friends, including someone else's medication being stolen from the home medicine cabinet. In addition, Americans are now advised that their usual methods for disposing of unused medicines—flushing them down the toilet or throwing them in the trash—both pose potential safety and health hazards.

Quincy Police also provides a drug disposal receptacle inside the lobby at police headquarters. Unused medications can be dropped off 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Needles and other sharp objects are not accepted.

Earth Day Celebration At Faxon Park Saturday

In 1970, the first Earth Day began with Alaskan Sen. Gaylord Nelson organizing educational events across the country to raise awareness for the need to protect our natural resources.

On Saturday, April 27th, Quincy will mark the 39th anniversary of this important day. A variety of environmental organizations and City departments will come together at one of the city's most beautiful parks to explore nature and celebrate its protection.

The Quincy Environmental Network (QEN) and along with the City of Quincy's Environmental Treasures Program have organized this event which starts at 1 p.m. at Faxon Park There will be an easy family-friendly hike to view signs of spring around the interior of the park, followed by a more challenging hike exploring areas of the park that you may never have seen.

Climb to the highest point of Penn's Hill. See areas that were once slated for apartments and condominiums, which are now protected forests, thanks to the efforts of local environmentalists. Learn about efforts to preserve and expand the park further.

Participants will also learn about various environmental groups working in Quincy and how to get involved. Talk to representatives from the Quincy Fair Trade Taskforce, and learn how our purchases impact the environment and the quality of life of people all over the world.

Hear from Quincy Climate Action Network (QCAN) how Quincy is becoming less dependent on fossil fuels. Understand ways to recycle better from the city's Recycling Department. Meet representatives from area environmental advocacy groups, and hear about the great work they are doing.

Thanks to the City's Energy and Sustainability Office, there will be a number of electric and hybrid cars on hand to view and test drive. Kathryn Hubley Seeks Third Term On School Committee

Kathryn Hubley announces her candidacy for re-election to the Quincy School Committee.

An advocate for education in Quincy for years, Hubley is presently serving her second term after being elected in 2011 and then reelected in 2015. In addition to her service on School Committee, Hubley is a Quincy Public School parent and has volunteered since her children enrolled back in 2004, serving on school PTOs, the Quincy Citywide Parents' Council, and as a member of the Quincy Parents' Advisory Council to Special Education.

Hubley was unanimously voted by her colleagues to serve as vice chairperson of the Quincy School Committee for the 2014-16 term and is presently chairperson of the Budget & Finance Sub-committee. "As Vice Chair and as a member of the committee, my goal was to put a renewed focus on things that impact the education of all Quincy Public School students. A student, family, and teacher focus help shape the right priorities," Hubley said her campaign announcement.

"I have done my best to be involved with schools across the city attending school events, such as literacy nights, cultural fairs, PTO meetings, and graduation ceremonies; it is important as a committee member to be accessible to families.

"In addition to meeting parents at school events or a local coffee shop, I'm also available to parents on social media answering questions, sharing helpful information, and making the right referrals to school resources," Hubley said.

Quincy's School Committee is responsible for overseeing a $91 million annual operating budget with over 900 professional teaching staff and a few hundred administrative staff, providing public education across

KATHRYN HUBLEY

11 elementary schools, five middle schools, two high schools, an early childhood center, and extended & continuing education opportunities to more than 9,000 students.

"Our schools are amazing, but they are going through many changes and it's important to have an experienced and dedicated team on the School Committee." Hubley said. "The state of Massachusetts is in the process of moving the MCAS testing process online, impacting test proctoring and student outcomes. The state is also in the process of implementing new civics and science curriculum requirements. To be successful with state mandated changes, we need a school committee that has a parent's perspective and a strong understanding of our schools across the city. Our professional teaching staff needs our support and the necessary resources to be successful amidst this changing environment."

Since being elected, Hubley said she has fought to restore the literacy program, media specialists, and paraprofessionals in all kindergarten classrooms, and strongly advocated for increased building security at all schools. Most recently, Hubley advocated for increased engineering curriculum at all middle schools. Hubley's priorities and perspective come from her experience as a Quincy Public School parent, a former teacher of preschool through kindergarten, and as a former foster parent.

Prior to serving on School Committee, Hubley served two terms as president of the Quincy Citywide Parents' Council.

"By focusing on issues that impact students and families every day," said Hubley, "we substantially increased school representation at the Quincy Citywide Parents' Council. Through greater representation, schools benefit from the sharing of best practices from across the city and participate in advocacy on issues common to all schools represented by the council, such as anti-bullying efforts and substance abuse."

Prior to the Quincy Citywide Parents' Council, Hubley served on the Wollaston School PTO from 2003 through 2009, serving in several board positions including three terms as president. Hubley was also a member of the Wollaston Elementary School Improvement Council, working with school administration, teachers, parents and business community partners to create a safe and nurturing learning environment.

Hubley lives on Wollaston Hill with her husband Walter and their two children, Nathan who attends North Quincy High School, and Victoria who attends Lesley University. Outside of her efforts with Quincy Public Schools, Hubley is actively involved in community building efforts as vice president and co-founder of the Wollaston Hill Neighborhood Association and volunteers as the Wollaston Hill neighborhood captain with PorchFest Quincy.

Hubley will kick-off her campaign on May 14th from 6 to 8 p.m. at the Cagney's Restaurant on Washington Street in Quincy. All are invited to attend.

Visit her website www.KathyHubley.com or contact her at khubley@comcast.netfor more information.

Career, Music Students Honored By School Committee

By TOM GORMAN

The school committee recently honored the district's middle school students who participated in the Massachusetts Music Educators Eastern Junior District Choral and Band Festival and several Quincy Career Vocational Technical Education (CVTE) students.

Nine singers and one instrumentalist were recognized for performance in the recent music festival.

"They worked very hard to show their outstanding musical technique, sight reading, their performance skills, and competitive auditions which included other middle school districts from around the eastern part of the state," the district's high school curriculum Director Dr. Elizabeth Hallett told the school committee in introducing the students.

The middle school choral students are Christiana Nguyen, Vivian Fu, Mary Doherty, all from Central Middle School; Abigail Coughlin of Atlantic Middle School; Grace Cunniff, Maia Popa, Matthew Maderos, Devereaux Fuller, and Broad Meadows student Tess Louzan. The instrumentalist, Yu Fan Mei who plays trumpet, is a Central Middle School student.

Hallett commended the district's middle school band and choral directors for preparing the students for the festival.

Career and Technical Education Executive Director Keith Segalla introduced the CVTE students.

"We're honored to recognize our talented career vocational technical education students for their outstanding accomplishments and achievements for this year," he said.

This year's Outstanding Career Vocational Technical Education Student of the Year, Quincy High School heath care technology major, Maggie Zheng, was recognized along with North Quincy High School senior Kari Bolanger, who is majoring in early education and childcare.

The award recognizes students whose scholastic and technical achievements has contributed to the school system. Students must have a 3.5 GPA, technical competence, leadership skills, excellent attendance, community involvement, and vocational work related experience.

CVTE teachers at North Quincy and Quincy high nominate students for the award and forward names to a selection team that whittles the nominees to nine. Those students are interviewed and a winner is chosen.

Zheng was honored for "excelling in the health technology course," according to health technology teacher Lori Broughton. Zheng has a 4.32 GPA and a grade average of 98 percent in the CVTE healthcare program. She ranks 22nd out of 391 students and trains adolescents to understand healthy relationships.

Zheng plans to major in pre-med and biology.

"I chose the health care technology program at Quincy High School because I always had an interest in health and wellness," she said. "I have known for a long time that I wanted to pursue a career in medicine. The skills I have mastered in health care technology have taught me how to provide patient care and to promote patient safety which is the foundation for a career in health care."

Zheng called the CVTE student of the year interview process "overwhelming," but, said the highlight was demonstrating how to help a choking victim.

With the help of classmate Tina Zhou, Zheng reenacted the demonstration for the school committee, explained the signs and symptoms of choking and showed the proper procedure of performing the Heimlich maneuver.

Zheng explained the clinical placement experience at a local nursing rehabilitation center has given her "hands-on, real world experiences."

She has earned several health-related certificates and credentials through the CVTE program and next month will take the certified nursing assistant exam and obtain a home health aide certificate.

Zheng said she has not yet chosen a college, but her top choice is Tufts University.

Bolanger said she enrolled in her school's early childhood education and childcare course two years ago and since has "become proficient in child growth and development, health and safety in the learning environment, behavior management of children, legal and ethical responsibilities as a teacher, and career exploration."

She has earned certifications in the American Heart Association CPR and first aid, and career safe. Upon graduation in June, Bolanger will receive her certificate of occupational proficiency and a state certificate in early childhood education enabling her to work as a preschool teacher.

As part of the program, she spends three afternoons each week in a Beechwood Knoll School first grade class working with students under the direction of the teacher. Bolanger developed lesson and activity plans and conducted an interactive technology phonics program which students completed on iPads.

Bolanger credited the CVTE program for being hired as a teacher at the Jack and Jill Nursery at Marina Bay.

"I was hired because of the many qualifications I have obtained through the early childhood care program," she said. "I really love working with the kids there."

In the fall, Bolanger will attend Eastern Nazarene College majoring in elementary education.

"Someday, I hope to become a Quincy Public School teacher," she said.

Quincy High Career Vocational Technical students who won medals in the SkillsUSA district competition were also honored - Chase Reardon who captured the gold medal in technical computer applications and Ethan Graney who won the silver in computer programming.

On Feb. 27, seven Quincy High School students competed in the district program and brought home the two medals.

Reardon, a senior at Quincy High, has been part of the school's SkillsUSA program for the past two years and serves on its leadership team.

"SkillsUSA is a partnership of students, teachers, and industries working together to ensure that America has a skilled workforce," he said.

He explained that students compete in district, state and national levels. The district is a written test while the state and national competitions are performance based. On Feb. 27, seven Quincy High School students competed in the district program and brought home the two medals.

Reardon said he chose the technical computer applications competition "because of my experience in technical courses at Quincy high."

"The technical computer applications contest topics included the installation and operation of software, hardware and cabling plus general computer knowledge," he said.

Reardon said he plans to attend Quincy College and Curry College in the fall where his studies could range from Information Technology and broadcasting to marine science and art.

"Someday I hope to own a business that impacts the community in a positive way," he said.

Graney, also a senior at Quincy high, is enrolled in the Information Technology program.

"In my vocational program, I have learned many skills about computers and the internet," he said.

At the district competition, Graney applied his skills to develop a functional computer program.

"This event required the participant to develop an appropriate computer program from assignments and instructions," he said. "The program also has to be executable."

Both Graney and Reardon will advance to the state completion that will be held April 25 through the 27. If they receive a gold medal there, it's on to the national competition in June in Louisville, Kentucky.

Graney noted he competed in the state contest last year.

"I look forward to competing again and have my sights set for the nationals," he said.

Graney plans on attending UMass Boston in the fall majoring in computer science.

He added there are 35 students in the Quincy high SkillsUSA program representing such areas as healthcare, Information Technology, early childhood education/care and legal protective services. Fundraising and community service are part of the SkillsUSA program.

Committee Vice Chairwoman Emily Lebo commended the students for taking advantage of what the Quincy school system has to offer and noted how the CVTE students "doubled up on your academic and technical majors and are achieving so much. We are incredibly proud of you."

Married Couple Confused About Social Security Benefits

By RUSSELL GLOOR
AMAC Certified Social Security Advisor
Association Of Mature American Citizens

Dear Rusty: We are a little confused about husband and wife Social Security benefits. I am 63 years old (born 1955) and still employed full-time. My wife turns 60 this month. She is retired military and has been working in the civilian sector for a number of years now. She has always earned more than me. We are confused as to how Social Security payments between us will work. I know I will start to collect before she does. Can you help with an explanation? Signed: Confused

Dear Confused: Social Security benefits for married couples can, indeed, be confusing, especially if you both still work. If your wife has always been the higher-earner, you could possibly be entitled to a spousal benefit from her record, but only if your own benefit amount at your full retirement age (FRA) is less than 50% of your wife's benefit amount at her FRA.

Since you say you will claim Social Security before your higher-earning wife, any spousal benefit you may be entitled to will not take effect until your wife starts her benefits. To be clear, a spousal benefit is only due if that amount is more than you are entitled to on your own work record; otherwise you only get your own benefit. If a spousal benefit is due, what essentially happens is that you get your own Social Security benefit plus a "spousal boost" to bring you up to what you are entitled to as a spouse. The spousal benefit can be 50% of the higher earner's FRA benefit amount (if that is more than your own) but you only get the full 50% if it starts at your full retirement age; otherwise it is less than 50%. That's because any time any Social Security benefit is taken earlier than your FRA it is actuarially reduced according to the number of months before your FRA that it is taken.

If you (or your wife) collect Social Security before you have reached your full retirement age and you continue to work, you will be subject to an annual earnings limit ($17,640 for 2019) which, if exceeded, will cause SS to withhold benefits equal to $1 for every $2 you are over the limit. Since they don't withhold partial benefits, that could mean some months without benefits. That is true up to the year you reach your full retirement age when the earnings limit goes up by more than 2.5 times and the penalty is less ($1 for every $3 over the limit). Then, once you reach your full retirement age, there is no longer a limit to how much you can earn while collecting benefits. And for clarity, if you have benefits withheld because you exceed the earnings limit, you'll get time credit for those months when you reach your full retirement age, which will somewhat increase your benefit amount at your FRA. So, your plans for working and earning should be considered in deciding when both of you should claim your SS benefits.

To summarize, if you have both earned at least 40 SS credits, you are both entitled to your own Social Security benefit. If half of your wife's SS benefit at her full retirement age is more than your own benefit at your full retirement age, you'll also get a spousal boost equal to the difference. But if either of you claim benefits early they will be reduced, and if your spousal benefit starts before your FRA it will also be reduced. And don't forget, working before you reach your full retirement age will subject you to Social Security's annual earnings limit.

Comprehensive Rodent Control Program In Place

in a perspective so we can both kind of live quietly and not bother each other and people aren't bothered by going out in their yard and seeing rats."

The rat problem began after the winter of 2014 and '15, when a record-breaking 114 inches – nine and a half feet – of snow fell on the city, Jones said. The snowfall prevented pest control companies from baiting rat traps around the city.

"Back in 2015 when we had that winter with all that snow…the pest management companies weren't able to bait in the places we would normally bait or areas that they knew might have an issue and were already baited or privately baited by either a restaurant or apartment building," Jones said.

"They were unable to get to bait boxes, basically, because of the weather. That following spring, we saw this just upsurge in rodent activity. And it's not just us. If you look at statistics from many of the large urban cities around the United States, you see that the urban rat population has increased. There are a number of things that we look at that we think is the cause of that."

Rats, she explained, can breed very quickly – as many as a half dozen times in one year.

"Rats have short pregnancies and they can breed many times. They can have six litters in the year that they're probably alive, so two rats in a year's time can produce thousands of babies," Jones said. "So, we know if you have two rats and they're producing and there is two more and two more, you can have in a three-year period a half million rats that breed – descendants from those two original rats."

The City Council in 2018 approved Mayor Thomas Koch's request to increase the Health Department's budget from $836,000 to $1.27 million in the current fiscal year ending June 30. The increase included $200,000 more for pest control – bringing that line item to $280,000 – and money to hire the health inspector focused on pest control.

Drew Scheele, the health commissioner at the time, said the budget increase would allow the department to begin testing ContraPest, a product designed to stop rats from breeding. Jones said the city has begun deploying the new product as part of its rat control initiative.

"We know they can breed very quickly and one of the things we're looking at…is a comprehensive program where we're doing baiting with rodenticide, which is what you would normally do – rat bait and put out bait boxes. We're also doing some dry ice. Dry ice you can only use in certain areas. It can't be too close to a structure. And we're testing some rat contraceptive, basically. We're not sure it's going to work or not," Jones said.

"It looks like a rat bait, only it's a liquid. The rats have to drink 10 percent of their body weight in order to survive. This liquid is very satisfying to the rats when they drink it, and it's supposed to make them unable to produce."

"On top of that, we have this dedicated inspector who deals with nothing but the rodent situation," Jones added. "We have adapted our inspection forms to the New York City rat forms – I know more about rats than I ever thought I was going to and ever really wanted to – but we've adapted this form so you can actually have an active rat scoring system on it. We've put it on GIS so that we can see the hot spots.

"I think we have done well with it, but we still have more to do."

The rat problem is one seen across Quincy, Jones said. Areas around restaurants and denser neighborhoods are more likely to be affected.

"We see them all over the place…I can't really pick one particular hot spot. It's citywide," she said. "Obviously, you're going to see more rodent activity where you see restaurants and where you see more people."

Construction seen throughout Quincy has also contributed to the rat problem, Jones said.

"Development or roadwork or anything we do that shakes the ground and digs up the street is going to make the rats a little more mobile. There is a correlation with it – absolutely – just like there is a correlation with food establishments, with rubbish on the streets and unsanitary conditions," Jones responded when asked if there was any link between development and rodents.

She noted the Health Department's chief sanitarian, Cynthia DeCristofaro, reviews each proposed project to ensure compliance with relevant health codes. Rodent control measures are included as part of that process. The Inspectional Services Department checks on the rodent control measures after the projects get underway.

"These projects have to have a rodent control program," Jones said. "When projects come through the Health Department to have Cindy DeCristofaro read the plans and get our comments on a health perspective on it, one of the things we do is make sure they have a rodent control program ready to go. Then Inspectional Services follows up on that rodent control program. We are also kind of involved with that.

"Through the mayor's office, we're having this kind of interdepartmental connection so that we're not missing areas."

Education for residents and businesses in the city is also important, Jones said. Trash should be stored in secured containers, not simply taken to the curb in supermarket bags, to cut off a food supply for rats, for example, and potential sources of water should also be limited.

"Education for people is a huge portion of this – telling people you have to store your rubbish in a barrel with a cover on it, not plastic bags on the ground. A lot of people just throw their rubbish out in plastic bags from the supermarket and throw them on the ground. That's food and liquid for rats. That's a huge issue," Jones said.

"People collecting rainwater. It's a great idea to collect rainwater but there are certain specifications – it has to be in a container that's covered – because you're giving them liquid to feed on and they don't need much."

Residents should also clean up after their dogs – on their own property as well as in public places – and should avoid storing dog food in garages and sheds.

"Rats are attracted to dog feces, so you've got to make sure people are picking them up in their yards. People are pretty good about when they're walking their dogs picking up after their dogs," she said, and need to do so on their own property as well.

"People that maybe store dog food in a garage or a shed…the rats will be attracted to the dog food. They'll eat the dog food. Dog food has vitamin K in it, which allows the rats to clot better. Rat poison makes them bleed, so it counteracts the rodenticide. It can be kind of a vicious circle."

Councillors Hear Presentation On Higher Education Costs

eracy Task Force, on which Blount serves, has recommended personal finances and economics be included in standardized testing.

"One of the easiest ways to actually address this and one of the ways we discussed throughout the task force was to incorporate personal finance and economic coursework into the standardized testing because it already exists," Blount said.

"That in and of itself would create a great opportunity for us to educate high school juniors and seniors and others as they are preparing to study for the tests."

Without education on personal finances, Blount said many high school students wait until they fill out their FAFSA forms in twelfth grade before they start making difficult decisions concerning college and paying for higher education.

"As a result of that, most people are making decisions under duress, which are normally not the best decisions for them," he said.

Conversations concerning college financing should take place during grade 10 or 11 at the latest, Blount said.

"Starting early is extremely important. In most cases we see decisions being made under duress because we wait until the last minute to actually have the conversation about college and financing it," he stated.

"If we simply move those conversations up earlier to sophomore year…or at least by their junior year, we can at least ensure that we have decisions that are being made at acceptable times in acceptable environments that take away the duress that they may experience."

Councillor Anne Mahoney, who is the chairwoman of the education committee and a former school board member, said Quincy Public Schools hosts college information nights that detail student loan programs and financial aid, offers business classes for high school students and hosts a Credit for Life fair, which teaches students about finances, on an annual basis.

"Quincy Public Schools do a great job," she said.

Blount said the Credit for Life fairs are a valuable tool.

"Credit for Life fairs are an awesome thing in Massachusetts," he said. "That's a great experience."

Mahoney said schools can offer courses on personal finances, but it is important for families to discuss those issues as well. A high schooler, she said, might want to go to college in a particular location or attend a certain school because their friends are going there, even if it doesn't make sense from a financial standpoint.

"Schools can teach you so much, but families have to have an open dialogue with their students," Mahoney said.

High school students, Blount said, should also consider enrolling at a state school or community college to take their general education courses and then transfer elsewhere to complete their degree.

High school students from Quincy, Blount noted, can take courses at Quincy College the summers before and after grade 12 and potentially accrue a full semester's worth of college credits.

"You can start this process earlier. The summer before your senior year and the summer after your senior year, you can take these classes, so it prevents you from actually financing that first part of your college year," Blount said.

"We can do a lot with general education."

Quincy College President Michael Bellotti said the school provides an opportunity for students to start their journey in higher education.

"What we have at Quincy College, as we all know, is an opportunity for any

Way Of The Cross Marks Good Friday

Group Walks To Seven Local Catholic Churches

By TOM GORMAN

A group of parishioners recalled the steps of Jesus's journey to his Crucifixion by carrying a wooden cross through Quincy on Good Friday.

The 19th annual Quincy Way of the Cross stepped off on Friday morning from Sacred Heart Church in North Quincy with about 50 adults and children carrying a 6-foot tall cross to each of the city's seven Catholic churches. The group paused at each church along the nearly 10-mile route to pray at the Stations of the Cross before setting out to the next destination, finishing at Holy Trinity-Most Blessed Sacrament Church in Houghs Neck.

At St. Joseph's Church in Quincy Point, the group was greeted by pastor, Fr. Matt Williams, who also serves as pastor at St. John the Baptist on School Street. He said it was heartwarming to see both children and adults take part in a spiritual pilgrimage to remember what Good Friday and Easter are about.

ST. JOSEPH'S CHURCH Pastor, Fr. Matt Williams, left, greets Quincy Way of Cross participants as Joe Maloney carries the cross on Good Friday.

"They have a connection to the sacrifice that was made on the cross," he said.

Some participants joined the walk at various locales. Others welcomed the group at each church and joined in prayer and reflection. The majority walked the entire route.

From Sacred Heart, the walkers proceeded to St. Ann, then to St. Mary, and on to St. John. From there, they walked to St. Joseph's, then to Our Lady of Good Counsel, and finishing at Most Blessed Sacrament.

The Way of the Cross began on Good Friday, April 2, 2010, starting at Sacred Heart Church and following the same route in subsequent years. At each Catholic church, the group prays two Stations of the Cross.

The Stations of the Cross mark the 14 events of Jesus's walk in Jerusalem to Mount Calvary while carrying a wooden cross on which he was crucified. The Quincy Way of the Cross is for participants, as well as observers, to remember Jesus's sacrifice.

"Our walk is a way to spend Good Friday in a journey to recall the steps of Jesus and to spend time in the churches dear to us," the Quincy Way of the Cross website states. "We walk with Him from Station to Station."

During the walk, some participants, pray silently, sing, pray the Rosary, or just contemplate.

"We each have our own way of approaching the walk, but we as a group witness to motorists and passers-by who will see our large group and be reminded that Good Friday is here and that Jesus made the same fateful walk for us," states the website. "We place our trust in Jesus that he will make use of our visibility in the city."

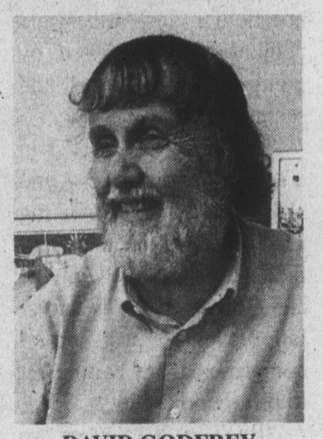
Childlikeness Is Yours ...Keep It!

By DAVID GODFREY



DAVID GODFREY

As I head for my car at the local market, I notice a little boy helping his mom push the grocery cart towards their car. As I go by them he spins around and with a big smile and great enthusiasm waves at me. I think, this little guy doesn't know me, yet he isn't afraid to treat me as if I were his best friend. I smile and wave back.

I began remembering my own childhood and going on errands with my mom. Whether holding her hand while crossing the street, going into the local bakery for a donut, or meeting someone new, I was a lot like this kid, happy, full of life and always feeling safe.

What happens to that childlike outlook? It lasts for a while, but as we become adults, youthful exuberance starts to fade, that freedom to express happiness, trust and excitement. Having attended a Christian Science Sunday School, I remember being taught that these childlike qualities come from God and can't be lost.

As we grow up, we accept that life's demands and duties necessitate putting aside innocence, spontaneity, and joy as if they were signs of weakness? Jesus stressed how important they are to adults when he said, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 18).

Mary Baker Eddy, the discoverer and founder of Christian Science, describes in her book Miscellaneous Writings how important is the spirit with which we go about our daily lives: "Beloved children, the world has need of you, — and more as children than as men and women: it needs your innocence, unselfishness, faithful affection, uncontaminated lives. You need also to watch, and pray that you preserve these virtues unstained, and lose them not through contact with the world. What grander ambition is there than to maintain in yourselves what Jesus loved, and to know that your example, more than words, makes morals for mankind!"

These attributes that counteract corruption, greed, hatred, and self-interest belong to all of us regardless of age, and we have the right and privilege to keep them alive in us.

At a recent talk on Christian Science, the speaker said that when we are humble enough to take God's hand, we can feel the same level of trust and confidence we had when our parents held our hand when we crossed the street as a child. Jesus even called the Father of us all Abba, indicating a close, tender relationship.

Being one of our Father, God's, very own children, holding on to childlike qualities is not so much difficult as completely natural. They're built in, and we can certainly be what God made us to be. Hymn 427 from the Christian Science Hymnal puts it this way: "Come walk with Love along the way, Let childlike trust be yours today; Uplift your thought, with courage go, Give of your hearts rich overflow. And peace shall crown your joy-filled day. Come walk with Love along the way."

David Godfrey is a Christian Scientist and has previously conducted worship services as First Reader. He currently serves on his church's Executive Board and is Chairman of its Lecture Committee.

for seized narcotics.

Mayor Thomas Koch has proposed to build a new public safety headquarters at 1 Sea St., the same site where the police station is located now, to replace the aging building. Preliminary plans for the facility, which would also serve as the new home for the Quincy Fire Department and the city's Emergency Management, Health, Inspectional Services and Veterans Services Departments, were unveiled at Monday's City Council meeting.

There is no price tag yet for the facility, city officials said, and several community meetings will be held this year as plans for the new building are finalized.

The current police station was built in 1925 and renovated in the 1980s. Keenan said the time has come to replace the nearly century-old facility and bring the other city departments under one roof.

"It's time now for a new building. I think it is a good move for the city," the police chief said. "It's basically going to be a facility for all – a one-stop shop – and I think it is a major convenience for the taxpayers and citizens of Quincy and I think it is the right time to make this move."

The Quincy Fire Department is currently headquartered on Quincy Avenue inside a firehouse from 1936. Chris Walker, Koch's chief of staff, said the department's administrative offices and fire prevention bureau would move to the new Sea Street building, while the three fire apparatus – Engine 1, Ladder 1 and Rescue 1 – would remain stationed on Quincy Avenue. The team designing the new building considered moving those apparatus to the new building but opted not to do so following a study of response times.

"The determination was made fairly quickly that the response times that would be created in some areas of the city would be unacceptable to the mayor," Walker said.

Moving the fire command staff to the new building would give the department more space to operate, said Todd Costa, an architect with the firm Kaestle Boos.

The Emergency Management Department is now located inside the Richard J. Koch Park and Recreation Complex on Merrymount Parkway. Costa said the department's present office is inside a retrofitted barracks and separate from the city's other emergency agencies.

The Health Department shares space with the Council on Aging inside the Kennedy Center on East Squantum Street. Costa said moving the Health Department would bring it closer to other city departments while allowing the Council on Aging to use more of the Kennedy Center.

Inspectional Services is located at 55 Sea St. inside a building it shares with the Department of Public Works. Costa said ISD is spread between four different locations inside the building, which makes it difficult for the department's staff to interact and work together. The department also needs additional space for storage, he added.

The Veterans Services Department is located on High School Avenue. Like police headquarters, Costa said the building has accessibility issues. It also has no parking onsite.

Preliminary plans for the new public safety headquarters call for the construction of a 150,700-square-foot building. Costa said the six departments now operate inside 67,800 square feet of space in their various buildings.

PLANS FOR A new public safety building, which would replace police headquarters, were unveiled Monday. This rendering shows what the proposed building, which is designed to resemble the Coddington Building, would look like from Sea Street. Several community meetings on the plan will take place this spring and summer. Rendering Courtesy City of Quincy

The police station would have the biggest footprint inside the new building at 92,400 square feet, nearly twice the 47,600 square feet the department has now. Inspectional Services would get 9,300 square feet of space inside the new building; the Fire Department 7,300 square feet; the Health Department 5,300 square feet; and Veterans Services 3,500 square feet. Another 25,700 square feet would be for shared space, like conference rooms, and 4,900 square feet would be set aside for city archives and storage.

The plan includes 272 parking spaces. A secure, two-story garage would include 192 spaces for the Police and Fire Departments. An additional 60 spaces would be set aside for city staff. Twenty spaces would be provided for the public. The public vehicle entrance would be on the Sea Street side of the building. City ve-

Hughes Not Seeking Re-Election In Ward 5

Former Councillor Charles Phelan Candidate

By SCOTT JACKSON

Ward 5 City Councillor Kirsten Hughes will not seek re-election in the fall, ending her eight-year tenure on the City Council.

Charles (Chuck) Phelan, a former city councillor, will run for the seat in this year's municipal election.

Hughes was first elected to the seat representing Ward 5 – which includes portions of Norfolk Downs, Wollaston, Hospital Hill and Quincy Center – in 2011 and she had been re-elected every two years since. She served as the president of the City Council in 2016 and 2017.

Hughes announced she would not run in a statement on Monday, calling her time on the City Council one of the great privileges of her life.

"After much thought and discussion with my family, I have decided that this will be my last term as Ward 5 city councillor. I will not be a candidate for re-election in the November city election, Hughes said.

"It has been one of the great privileges of my life to serve the city I love and to represent on the City Council the same neighborhoods where I grew up and where today Phil and I are raising our own family.

"Our city is strong, growing and poised for a great future, and I am incredibly proud to have worked with my colleagues on the [city council] and members [of] our community on so many important issues these past eight years. From the opening of our new Central Middle School, to fostering new life into our downtown to providing critical funding for major infrastructure and flood-relief projects across the ward, we accomplished much by working together. And much work remains. I'm looking forward to working as hard as I can these next several months on behalf of all the neighborhoods of Ward 5, as we continue to the move Quincy forward.

"I will always be filled with extraordinary gratitude for the opportunity and privilege to serve. Thank you."

Phelan is the first candidate to enter the race for the Ward 5 seat. He served as Ward 5 councillor from 1998 to 1996 and was council president in 1992 and 1993.

Phelan, who is not related to former mayor William Phelan, also served two stints as Quincy's information technology director. The first was from 1997 to 2002 and the second from 2008 until his retirement from the position last summer. In between, he worked for the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds in a similar position.

Phelan's wife, Michelle Lydon, is the owner of Hamel-Lydon Chapel in Wollaston. He said his experience in both the public and private sectors would serve him well as a city councillor.

"I am running to give a strong voice to the neighborhoods in Ward 5," Phelan said. "My experience in the public and private sectors gives me a unique perspective on what it means to be a city councillor."

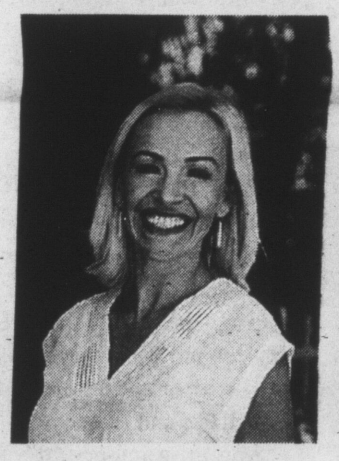
Phelan said he plans to begin campaigning for the seat in May and will be meeting residents throughout the ward while on the campaign trail.

"I am going to be as accessible and responsive to the needs of the residents as a I can be," he said.

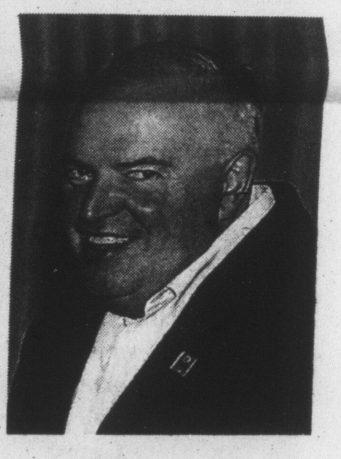
Nomination papers for the offices up for grabs in this year's municipal election are available starting May 7. The mayor's seat, all nine seats on the City Council, and three of the six School Committee seats will be on the ballot.

The deadline to submit completed nomination papers to the Board of Registrars of Voters is July 19 at 5 p.m. Certified nomination papers, including a statement of candidacy, would then need to be filed with the City Clerk's Office by 5 p.m. on Aug. 6.

The signatures of 50 registered voters are required for each office in a municipal election. Residents running for one of the six ward councillor seats must obtain the signatures from within their ward.



KIRSTEN HUGHES



CHARLES PHELAN

A preliminary election would be required if more than two candidates run for mayor or any one ward council seat, or if more than six ran for either councillor at-large or the school board.

The preliminary election would be held Sept. 10 and the final election on Nov. 5.

Ask Barbara Graceffa: Define A Well-Designed Room

Here's a simple question: How do you define a well-designed room? Paige Simple question?! Okay … I'll do my best to answer it in 400 words or less!

Let's begin with those conditions that inhibit a well-designed room: cluttered including too much furniture, over-done/over-the-top décor, and any combination of outdated, dirty, worn, and tired walls, flooring, lighting, furniture, and accessories.

The definition of stylish and attractive interior decoration is unique to each person. Some see well-designed as classic, traditional, and conservative while others lean toward contemporary, eclectic, industrial, artsy, modern, vintage, minimalist, or whatever else pleases their senses.

There are, however, four elements to a successful room.

First, it functions well. Whether the space is a family room or a home office, the room is designed around its purpose, has good flow, and suits the needs of the person(s) using it.

Second, a successful room expresses a mood; think a peaceful bedroom, a playful game room, an inviting kitchen or dining room.

Third, the space exhibits a sense of harmony – where the components of the room "play well together" while striking the right balance between unity and variety as well as creating a sense of restfulness and richness.

And most importantly in my opinion, a well-designed room is built over time and tells a personal story. Anyone can go to a furniture showroom and bring home everything in the display: furniture, rug, end tables, lamps, art, and accessories but this room, although very stylish, can lack personality.

If you love the ocean, hang nautical art in your living room and fill a bowl with seashells you've gathered from your favorite beach. If your much-loved travel spot is Paris, hang black and white photos of the city in your kitchen. If you are a wine enthusiast, why not take cues from your passion to adorn your dining room? So, the next time you look at a home décor magazine, be sure to look for these design elements (and read the accompanying descriptions to learn more about the homeowners' personal styles).

MountainOne Bank Offers Assistance To Homebuyers Through Housing Our Workforce Program

MountainOne Bank, with branches across Berkshire County and the South Shore, has been selected to participate in the Federal Home Loan Bank of Boston's Housing Our Workforce (HOW) Program, which assists local homebuyers with down-payment.

Through HOW, the FHL-Bank of Boston provides $2 million in grants to participating financial institutions to assist homebuyers with the purchase of an owner-occupied primary residence. Income-eligible households can receive up to $20,000 in a two-to-one match of down payments made at the time of purchase, which is forgivable after five years from the date of loan closing.

To be eligible, borrowers must be earning more than 80 percent and up to 120 percent of the area median income address of their new home, and must complete a homebuyer counseling program, and post-purchase counseling approved by MountainOne Bank. Loans are subject to credit approval.

"Many homeownership programs are designed to assist lower-income individuals and families. It is often challenging for those in a slightly higher income range to afford housing, particularly in communities where home prices are escalating. With this program, a greater number of borrowers who are incredibly important to the economic well-being of our communities will be able to achieve homeownership," said Melissa Weber, MountainOne Bank senior vice president.

MountainOne Bank is eligible to receive up to $100,000 in 2019 through HOW depending on availability of funds.

Those interested in learning more about how they may qualify for HOW funds can contact MountainOne Bank via the www.mountainone.com website or via phone at 855-444-6861.

student...to walk in and decide, whether they go part time or full time, how to begin that journey in education and that life-long learning," he said.

The new dual-enrollment program Blount referred to is beneficial to students and the college alike, Bellotti added.

"It gives them the opportunity to save money when they enter college. It also gives them the opportunity to learn about the great opportunity at Quincy College and get them comfortable with Quincy College," he said.

"Quincy College as an institution has evolved in terms of perception and right now more and more people are recognizing it as a way to learn about themselves as students and their opportunities."

Council President Brad Croall said he took classes at Quincy College before enrolling in a four-year school and said he would not be where he is today if he had not done so.

"If it wasn't for an institution like Quincy College to provide that level of support that ultimately led to a transition, namely through affordable education, I can honestly tell you I probably wouldn't be sitting here. I absolutely mean that," Croall said.

"I see, from my own kitchen table, the value of having community education that is affordable and accessible."

Councillor Noel DiBona said he attended Quincy College after previously having left a four-year school to reenter the workforce. He attended UMass Boston after going to Quincy College.

"Luckily, I went to Quincy College to get back into the grove of things after an absence of some years," DiBona said.

Ward 6 Councillor William Harris said his daughter went to college in Maine for a nursing degree. She then enrolled at Quincy College before earning her degree at a different four-year school.

"Quincy College credits were good," Harris said. "They helped make the dream come true."

Police Shaving Heads For 'The Mighty Quinn'

Members of the Quincy Police Department will be shaving their heads April 29 to show support for a young member of the Quincy police family, Quinn Waters who is affectinately known as "The Mighty Quinn."

Quinn was celebrating his third birthday on Sunday, Feb. 10, 2019, surrounded by his loving family at home in Weymouth. The very next day, Quinn became very ill and was admitted to Children's Hospital in Boston. Medical exams and tests resulted in the discovery of a large mass in Quinn's brain. In less than 24 hours, his family was rocked by the news no family wants to hear: Quinn had a brain tumor and was suffering from brain cancer.

On Monday, April 29, police officers will be shaving their heads to raise money for the St. Baldrick's Foundation and to show Quinn that they stand with him and that he is not fighting alone.

Donations can be made online at stbaldricks.org/events/mypage/13776/2019.

QUINN WATERS

A Job Well Done

By QUINCY POLICE LT. DAN MINTON

On Saturday, April 6, at approximately 2:25 p.m., Officer Steve Cleary was dispatched to the Clifford Marshall School on Moody Street to investigate a gray Nissan Altima with two females and two males driving on the basketball courts. The caller stated that none of the parents on scene were familiar with the occupants in the motor vehicle.

Upon arrival, the officer observed the vehicle parked in a handicap zone in front of the basketball courts with the four people standing next to it. As Officer Cleary approached the vehicle, one of the females yelled something to one of the males, who then glanced at the cruiser and ran off towards Moody Street. The same female then got into the driver's seat. The remaining male and female also got in the vehicle.

When the officer approached the driver and asked what was going on, she mumbled something about being sick of all these kids. When asked why she told the male to run away, she stated, "I don't know what you're talking about."

Officer Cleary asked the driver for her license and registration and she replied that she was leaving. The officer told her she was not free to leave and asked for her license and registration again, she then adamantly stated, "I ain't giving you my license." She then took her vehicle keys and made a motion towards the side of the steering wheel as if she was going to start the vehicle.

The officer opened the driver's door and ordered her to exit the vehicle due to her failing to submit her license. She refused and held onto the steering wheel with two hands.

Officer Sansevero arrived on scene and approached the vehicle. After ordering the driver to exit the vehicle and fearful she was about to drive off in a playground, the officers pulled the driver out of the vehicle and placed her in handcuffs.

LT. DAN MINTON

The female, a 39-year-old Quincy resident, was arrested and charged with refusing to produce a driver's license and resisting arrest. Since none of the passengers had a license to operate a motor vehicle, they were sent on way and the vehicle towed.

Nice Work!

Publishers Clearing House Scam:

Although the sweepstakes is legitimate, there are many con artists contacting people claiming to be from Publishers Clearing House. The scam starts with a call or letter saying you've won the Publishers Clearing House sweepstakes. In order to collect your prize, the caller states that you need to send money to pay for fees and taxes. In most cases, you will be instructed to send money by Western Union or MoneyGram, or by getting a reloadable card or gift card. The scammer uses this form of payment because it's nearly impossible to trace the money and it is highly unlikely you will ever get it back.

This scam can also start via the mail. Realistic-looking but fake checks are sent out to residents notifying you that you have won the sweepstakes and in order to claim your prize, you need to deposit the check and send some of the money back for expenses. The fraudulent check usually is for a smaller amount. These expenses may be for administrative fees, taxes, etc. The scammers want you to deposit their bogus check and for you to send them money. In most banking institutions, the Teller will advise you that there is up to a five day hold on the check to make sure that it is legitimate. When the check bounces, you may be on the hook for the money you sent.

If you think you've won a prize, here are a few things to know:

- Never send money to collect a prize, sweepstakes check, or lottery winnings. If you have to pay, it's a scam.
- Never deposit a check and send back money, even if the funds appear in your account. That's a sure sign of a scam.
- If anyone calls asking you to pay for a prize, hang up.
- Know this! The real Publishers Clearing House says it will never ask you to pay a fee to collect a prize.

Judge Antoinette Leoney Visits The Woodward School

Massachusetts District Court Judge Antoinette Leoney recently visited The Woodward School to speak with Woodward's AP United States Government and Politics students.

Judge Leoney spoke about her personal and professional life path. Her story captured and inspired the students, as she described growing up the second of six children, whose father passed away at a young age. She conveyed her determination to reach her full potential, as the motivating energy that led her to become a lawyer, and ultimately, a District Court Judge.

Judge Leoney and the students dove into a deep discussion of the branches of government and their roles and purposes in our constitutional system. She spoke about our federal and state Constitutions, emphasizing the rule of law as a fundamental tenet of our democracy, that protects us from arbitrary power and subordinates all citizens equally to the law of the land. Judge Leoney reminded the students that, "our constitution is there to protect against the un-ruling of law... no person, not me or anyone, not even a President of the United States or a State Governor is above the law."

Woodward students listened with great interest as citizens and also, in preparation for the AP exam in May. They were inspired by Judge Leoney's wisdom, her personal story, and her passion for the rule of law in a democratic society.

Woodward School Honors Women Of Distinction

Beth Veneto, Janelle Woods-McNish Award Recipients

The Woodward School recently honored two women of distinction at the school's annual awards celebration held at Granite Links Golf Club.

This year's honorees were Beth Veneto and Janelle Woods-McNish. The Women of Distinction Award celebrates the achievements and contributions of women who are role models for Woodward students. A Woodward Woman of Distinction is authentic, successful in her profession, a model community servant, actively engaged in the community and/or has strong Quincy roots.

Besides the award presentations, the evening featured poetry readings by Woodward School students and State House citations from the city's legislative delegation: state Sen. John Keenan and state Reps. Tackey Chan and Bruce Ayers.

Born and raised in Quincy, Beth Veneto, better known as Ginger Betty, is well known beyond her home city. "Sharing Cookies and Making Friends" is her Team Ginger Betty motto. She has been a professional gingerbread maker creating smiles and sweet memories for over 25 years.

Veneto's self-made success is impressive, as she was raised by a tough cookie mom Trixie (Kathryn Norton) and her hard working father (Andy Veneto), who always held two or three jobs. Together, they instilled a great work ethic and passion to reach for the stars, in their eight children.

Beth said she is forever thankful to her older sister Karen for introducing her to gingerbread making by gifting her a decorating kit when she was 10 years old. After working briefly in restaurant management, Beth returned home and eventually opened Ginger Betty's which is a beloved institution in Quincy. She continues to give back to her community to local schools, sports teams, individuals, as well as her very own G.I. Ginger Betty Foundation, where she shares her signature soft Ginger Betty Snaps to soldiers around the world

Janelle Woods-McNish has an impressive professional and charitable career. She is a director at Harvard Pilgrim Health Care, where she oversees the company's community involvement. She is also the national spokesperson for Children of the Night, which raises awareness for human trafficking.

In 2016, Janelle was named a 40 under 40 business leader by the Business Journal. She is dedicated to the cause of helping young girls to end these vicious and horrific crimes. In 2018, Janelle placed 2nd runner-up in the 2018 Mrs. International Pageant. Her success in numerous national and international beauty pageants provides her with the platform to reach a wide and influential audience to aide her in her efforts. She is frequently spotted at charity events promoting her campaign.

For over 120 years, The Woodward School has provided girls with a college preparatory program that fosters a love of learning while providing serious instruction in academic disciplines, the arts, technology and athletics. The Woodward Women of Distinction serve as influential role models to all of the dedicated students at the School. The school is grateful for their support and the continuing support of all former Woodward Women of Distinction.

'Astral Weeks: Secret History Of 1968' At Historical Society Thursday

As part of Quincy Historical Society's History of Pop-Culture Series, acclaimed rock journalist, musician, and author Ryan H. Walsh will visit the Adams Academy on Thursday, April 25th at 7 p.m., and talk about his book "Astral Weeks: A Secret History of 1968."

The book, which has won critical praise from numerous critics, examines how singer Van Morrison's brief relocation to Cambridge, Massachusetts in 1968 influenced Morrison's creation of his iconic rock album "Astral Weeks."

Walsh discusses the historical importance of the Newport Folk Festivals, the Velvet Underground's frequent Boston appearances, the rise of WBCN, and James Brown's Boston Garden concert following the assassination of Martin Luther King, Jr.

"Astral Weeks" has served as an inspiration for generations of listeners, including Bruce Springsteen and Martin Scorsese. Though its origins have been shrouded in legend, Walsh's book unearths the album's fascinating backstory as well as some of the secrets of the time and place that birthed it: Boston 1968.

The evening will include a presentation by and a Q&A session with the author, after which he will be available to sign copies of the book.

This event is open to all and free to attend.

McGillicuddy Middle Schools Swimming Championships

The McGillicuddy Middle School Swimming Championships were held recently at Lincoln Hancock Community Pool.

Swimmers from all five middle schools participated in their end of the season meet. When asked why the swimmer chose to participate the responses varied.

Deekshita Madhalam from Point Webster said, "I've been on the team for two years. Swimming has always been a passion for me. I like the competition part of the program."

Sterling's Bridget Hoare said "I started swimming in 5th grade when Mr. (Robert) McGillicuddy encouraged me to join and always do my best. He also got me interested in diving."

Katrina Tran, also from Sterling, said: "I started on the team in 6th grade. I like how Sterling is a small school so you can get that one on one coaching experience."

Atlantic's Makayla Batson remarked, "When I was little, I loved the water. When I heard there was a swim team, I thought it would be really cool to join."

When asked what the best part was she replied: "Swimming with my teammates and supporting each other!"

Brian Wolowicz, an Atlantic 7th grader who was in his first year on the team, said: "I've been swimming since I was three but never on a team. I thought it would be interesting to try something new and swim competitively."

Central's Kyrie McBlue when asked why she joined replied: "I haven't swam in awhile. I used to love it so I wanted to get back to it again." Her teammate Calla Jones had her reasons: "I love swimming with my friends, my cousin was on another team and he encouraged me to join."

Broad Meadows' Brynn Toler, an 8th grader who has been on the team all three of her middle school years, said, "I liked the fact that it was one practice a week and then championship day. It's more relaxed and fun that way." Her teammate Sofia Ortiz, who swims freestyle and backstroke had similar feelings. "I have been swimming since I was three and just love to swim. I also liked the setup of the swim program of practice with your school and then face competition on championship day."

Sterling's Lillian Nguyen echoed many of the sentiments expressed when she concluded: "I just wanted to try it and it was so much fun the way our coach ran practice. I wanted to keep participating."

Whatever the motivations, the swimmers were excited for the big meet. It opened with the playing of the national anthem by Point's band members: Florence Huang, Michelle Le and Vincent Lee.

Sterling's Katrina Tran opened the meet, welcoming everyone to the McGillicuddy championships, named in honor of former teacher and swim coach who passed away two years ago.

The meet was competition among the individual swimmers rather than a team event this year. The crowd cheered all of the competitors from first place to last place.

Exhibition diving for fun finished the morning's event and everyone leaving had big smiles on their faces; Mr. McGillicuddy would have been pleased.

Coaches for the swim teams included: Atlantic-Chris Ranft, Broadmeadows-Brian Tardif, Central-Joann Hallisey and Paul Griffiths, Point-Molly Dalton and Sterling-Julia Kusiak-Carey.

The swim meet would be impossible to run if not for the help of the Quincy and North Quincy swim team members who helped set up the pool, time and record races. They include: Amaryllis Gui, Maeve Farrell, Charles Culata, Juliana Chieng, Annabelle Le, Jullana Salbibia, Anna Cahill, Nia Cahill, Kumudini Devalla, Mia Heim, Derek Tran, Florence Daley, Reina Bouma, Charlotte Airosus, Denise O'Donovan, and Logan Almeida.

Quincy High Softball Has A New Fan

By TOM GORMAN

E. Hunt Burke never saw the Quincy High School girls softball team play, but their off-field demeanor made him a fan.

A random act of kindness by members of the team prompted Hunt to send a letter to Quincy High principal Lawrence Taglieri detailing the encounter. The letter was read to the school committee on April 10 by Vice Chairwoman Emily Lebo.

In the letter, Hunt, who is from Virginia, explained that he was visiting his grandmother and granddaughter in Quincy on a recent weekend and having breakfast with them in a local restaurant when he observed a group of about 10 young ladies at a table across from them.

"It was apparent to me that these high school-aged girls shared a strong bond," Hunt wrote. "We were so impressed with their demeanor, that I contemplated paying for their meal. Frequently and anonymously, we enjoy doing so for law enforcement, fire and rescue, and members of the military."

The girls, however, beat Hunt to the punch.

"Imagine our delight and awe when our waitress informed us that the group had paid for our meal," Hunt wrote. "We were humbled. I thanked them and asked whether they were an athletic team of some sort."

The girls informed Hunt that they were members of the Quincy High softball team.

"There are teams, and there are teams that do more than play a sport together," wrote Hunt.

He had high praised for the team's act.

"Random acts of kindness are rare in the world, and you have some very special students," Hunt wrote to Taglieri. "I applaud the 2019 Quincy High School softball team and would like to come cheer them to victory, but we live in Virginia. So far as I'm concerned, they are the winners regardless of the season results. Any college or university will be lucky to have them as students."

Hunt noted that his 5-year-old granddaughter "witnessed and understood" the girls' act of "paying it forward," something she will likely carry with her.

"Who knows where she might apply kindness and generosity over the course of her lifetime," wrote Hunt.

Both Lebo and Quincy School Supt. Dr. Richard DeCristofaro expressed appreciation of Hunt's letter.

Hunt is the CEO and chairman of Burke & Herbert Bank, based in Alexandria, Virginia. The institution has been owned and operated by the Burke and Herbert families since 1852.

North Quincy Baseball Shines Against Blue Hills In Sullivan Tournament

By TOM JOYCE

The bats came alive for the North Quincy High baseball team April 18th.

The Red Raiders had their best offensive performance to date while hosting Blue Hills in the consolation round of the Steven J. Sullivan Tournament. The Red Raiders came out on top, winning 8-4 to improve to 1-2 on the season.

"We're just trying to get ourselves into favorable counts where we can drive fastballs, and that worked out for us today," Red Raiders head coach Matt Edgerly said. "On the bases, we were aggressive. We have a good athletic team here."

Trailing 4-2 after two innings of play, North Quincy clawed back. Brady McGuinness, who picked up the win, settled down and was dominant. He retired the side in order in the top of the third before the Red Raiders bats took care of the rest.

Jack Pritchard led off by legging out an infield single. The next batter, Liam Hines, who collected three hits on the day, blasted an RBI double to make it a one run game, 4-3. And with one out in the inning, Danny Ferrara drove him in with an RBI single which dropped into left field.

Ferrara then stole second base and with two outs in the inning, he reached third on a passed ball. This allowed Noah Wines to drive in the go-ahead run on an error by Blue Hills' first baseman, putting the Red Raiders up 5-4.

Over the next two-and-a-half innings, neither side got much going offensively. McGuinness cruised through the Blue Hills lineup, not allowing any hits. Meanwhile, Hines doubled again with two outs in the bottom of the fifth, but the Red Raiders did not capitalize on the scoring opportunity.

That would come an inning later as the team padded their lead. Andrew Airosus and Brady McGuinness showed plate discipline to lead off the bottom of the sixth; they each drew walks. Airosus then stole third and McGuinness reached second on defensive indifference, giving Hines an RBI opportunity with one down in the inning. He capitalized, smacking a two-RBI double over the left fielder's head to put the team up by three. With two down in the inning, Ferrara knocked him in with a dribbler between the first and second basemen. This gave the Red Raiders an 8-4 lead.

Although Blue Hills showed some life at the plate in the final frame, they were unable to make a comeback. The team led off the seventh inning with back-to-back singles before the Red Raiders pulled McGuinness and brought in Brian Pham to close things out. He did just that, getting a fielder's choice and two infield pop-outs in his scoreless and hitless inning of work.

McGuinness picked up the win for the Red Raiders. He pitched six innings and allowed four runs on seven hits while striking out six batters.

"He was great today," Edgerly said. "He battled through a lot of tough at-bats. He was able to settle down and get us the win."

The Red Raiders also received a strong starting pitching performance in the first game of the tournament from Joe Brahimi. Although the team lost to Milton, 7-3, he allowed just two hits in his five innings of work.

"Between those two starters, pitching is definitely a strength for us this season," Edgerly said. "Our defensive is improving and offensively, we need to get timely hits like we did today."

The tournament is named for former North Quincy assistant baseball coach Steven Sullivan, who passed away in 2016 from colon cancer at 28 years old.

This year, it featured four different teams: North Quincy, Milton, Blue Hills and Foxboro. For Edgerly, who was best friends with Sullivan and grew up with him, seeing a variety of teams support the tournament was special.

"We have four different leagues represented," he said. "It's awesome to see these teams come up to play in it."

Two NQHS Students Win Healthy Whale Art Awards

Two students from North Quincy High School have won awards for their art submissions to the 2019 Healthy Whale, Healthy Ocean Challenge, sponsored by Boston-based Bow Seat Ocean Awareness Programs (Bow Seat) and Conservation Law Foundation (CLF).

The students are Queena Wu, Notable Award; and Jessica Wu, Notable Award.

The Healthy Whale, Healthy Ocean Challenge invited K-12 students from the New England and Gulf of Maine regions in the U.S. and Canada to use their creative voices to highlight the critically endangered North Atlantic right whales and the need for conservation of marine ecosystems and resources. More than 130 participants created visual art, poetry, and short films that celebrated the iconic right whales and drove action for their protection. Their submissions emphasized the beauty of the animals and called attention to the many threats they face, including ship strikes, entanglements, and pollution.

The Challenge winners and participants will be recognized on Sunday, May 5th, at an awards ceremony during the Right Whale Festival at the New England Aquarium. This community event will feature a student art exhibit, film screenings, presentations by youth conservation leaders, and a panel discussion moderated by Brian Skerry. In addition, the participants' pieces will be an important part of an ongoing campaign to inspire awareness, care, and action for right whales and our ocean, which will include future events and art exhibitions.

hicles would use an entrance on Broad Street.

The building would stand three stories tall with a lower level accessible from the Broad Street side.

The lower level would house locker rooms, showers, a firing range and wellness center for police, plus archive and storage space for ISD and other city departments.

The main lobby would be located on the ground floor, along with an emergency services lobby that would be open 24 hours a day. Veterans Services and the Health Department would occupy one wing of the ground floor. The Police Department would occupy the other wing, including a cellblock, crime prevention, community police, special operations and victims' advocates.

Inspectional Services would be housed in one wing on the second floor of the building. The Police Department's criminal investigation bureau and special investigations unit would also be housed on the second floor, along with an evidence room, a training room and firearms simulator.

The Fire Department's administrative offices and fire prevention bureau, the police chief and other command staff, the Emergency Management Department, and a combined dispatch center would all be located on the third floor.

Joseph Shea of the firm Woodard & Curran, which the city has hired as the owner's project manager for the construction of the new building, said it would be built in two phases. The first phase would include construction of the new police, fire and emergency management offices, all of which would be housed in the same wing of the building. That phase, he said, could be built around the existing police station, which would mean the city would not need to find an interim police headquarters.

After the first phase is complete, the old police building would be demolished and the wing housing the remaining three departments would be constructed, Shea said.

The city will hold several community meetings on the proposed new building later this year, Shea said. The design team could be back before the City Council in the fall with final plans, including cost projections, he added; the city has also begun to apply for state and federal grants for the project.

Walker, Koch's chief of staff, said construction of the new building would require the demolition of Fr. Bill's Place and the Bryan Post, both of which are located on Broad Street. The city owns the building in which Fr. Bill's Place is located, Walker said, while the city would have to acquire the Bryan Post.

Koch had sought a $1.3 million bond in 2017 to purchase the Bryan Post, but the council did not act on the request.

Walker said the city would work with Fr. Bill's Place to find a new facility in the nearby area.

"Fr. Bill's, the plan would be to relocate it in that general vicinity," he said. "Fr. Bill's has talked about its long-term goal – it's long-term game plan – about changing up its operation to be more of a full-day housing resource center where clients are in the program all day with fewer emergency shelter beds."

Councillor Anne Mahoney, who said she was concerned about the potential price for the project, asked Walker if there is any estimate on how much it would cost. Walker said it was too soon to say.

"We will be back before this body with a number and a full project budget when that project budget is fully developed. We're not going to put any timeline on it…on when this absolutely, positively has to be back before this body, but the mayor and his team are committed to seeing this through," Walker said.

The City Council in 2017 had approved $500,000 to study the construction of the new public safety building. Susan O'Connor, the city auditor, said all but $12,000 of that has been spent or encumbered to date.

Mahoney requested a breakdown of how that money has been spent so far, in particular how much money went towards Kaestle Boos and how much to Woodard & Curran. She questioned the hiring of Woodard & Curran to work on the project.

"How does fit in to this particular plan?" she said.

Walker said a project such as the new public safety building requires an owner's project manager and called Woodard & Curran well qualified to handle the task.

"For any project of this magnitude, in addition to the architects…we have an owner's project manager that oversees the day-to-day and week-to-week process with this project. Woodard & Curran works with the city on a number of projects. They are, quite frankly, the best in the business when it comes to this," Walker said. "We're very happy to continue the relationship we have with them."

Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci, who is the chairman of the council's public safety committee, asked the administration to include comparisons of the cost of the new building and other similar facilities either in Quincy or elsewhere when it makes the funding request.

Palmucci said he would likely support the new project, even if he might not like the cost of it, because public safety is a priority.

"I offer my support of this endeavor knowing full well that I am not going to like the price. It's going to be something you just have to swallow, because there is such a need. It is so important," Palmucci said.

"We expect a lot from our public safety folks. They are well-trained professionals and they need a facility that allows them to do their job effectively in the 21st century."

He also said the design team should consider having the Police Department's K-9 unit housed in the new building as opposed to the proposed animal shelter on Quarry Street. Palmucci said it would likely be more cost effective if the K-9 unit were located at the new public safety building.

Ward 1 Councillor David McCarthy, in whose district the police station is located, said the current building is in horrific shape.

"It's well overdue," he said. "The condition of the police station has been horrific for many years."

"I'm in full support of the whole project and bringing all those services down to the police station," McCarthy added.

Quincy Boys Volleyball Falls To Randolph

By TOM JOYCE

The Quincy High boys volleyball team fought hard, but they could not overcome a difficult opponent on Monday night.

The Presidents hosted Randolph and while each set was a battle in itself, they took a 3-1 loss and fell to 5-4 on the season.

"I thought we got better as the match went along, but we had too many unforced errors," Presidents head coach Jacqui Niosi said. "We had 26. You can't have that many and beat anyone, so we're looking to clean things up a bit."

Although Randolph edged Quincy in the first set, 25-21, the Presidents came out with some excellent momentum in set No. 2. They jumped out to an 8-4 lead, forcing their opponent to call a timeout – but that didn't do anything to shift the momentum. The Presidents went on an 8-2 scoring run over the next 10 points to take a 16-6 lead. From there, however, the rest of the set was a stalemate; each team scored nine more points but thanks to the early edge, the Presidents took it 25-15.

"I think it was their mental toughness," Niosi said of how the team was able to recover from the first set loss. "You have to compete every point. You can't let your mind drift. You can't take plays off and we need to do a better job with it."

In the third set, momentum did not swing too hard in either direction early on. The Presidents went down 6-3 and a 5-0 run put them up 8-6 before Randolph came back and tied things at 11 apiece. However, Randolph started gaining momentum from there, going on a 6-2 run to go up 17-13 which forced a Presidents timeout. The Presidents narrowed the deficit to two points 23-21 and Randolph called a timeout in response, but the two teams split the next four points evenly, so Randolph took the set 25-23.

And in the final set, the Presidents could not capitalize on their good start. The Presidents found themselves with an early 9-4 lead, but that was as big as their lead would become. Over the next 25 points, Randolph outscored them 15-10, tying the game up at 19-19. Randolph continued outscoring the Presidents and with the score at 24-23 in Randolph's favor, the road team scored the match point and won the set 25-23.

Although the team dropped their final two sets, they came down to the final point, showing the team is capable of competing at a high level.

"It's great to stay out and compete, but we need to do that from point one and not just at the end of the game," Niosi said. "I think we're a little bit young, so we're learning that you can't get away with that against good teams."

On the attack, Jacob Zarges led the way with a team-high 10 kills while Huy Nguyen finished second with six; they each shined defensively, with two blocks apiece. Khalid Elbeih's 22 assists and four aces were both team highs, as were Tedi Qafko's 18 digs.

This season, the Presidents have a young team. Their roster features just two seniors: Theo Fox and Jacob Ball. Since they have a young team, the Presidents are working hard to improve at practice and Niosi said the team has seen growth both offensively and defensively.

Currently, the team is putting a lot of its focus on improving in transition and on their blocking skills.

"Blocking is really important," Niosi said. "It's something that's kind of hard to learn to do correctly, so we spend a lot of time trying to get better at that."

The Presidents hosted cross-town rival North Quincy Wednesday at 5:30 p.m. The Red Raiders defeated Taunton on the road Monday, 3-0, to improve to 6-1 on the season.

Gasoline Prices Rise 8 Cents, AAA Says

Gasoline prices in Massachusetts are up eight cents this week, according to AAA Northeast.

AAA's April 22 survey of prices in Massachusetts finds self-serve, regular unleaded averaging $2.69 per gallon. The Massachusetts price is fifteen cents lower than the national average for regular unleaded of $2.84. A year ago at this time, the average price in Massachusetts was two cents lower at $2.67.

"Monday morning crude oil was trending higher on reports that the U.S. State Department plans to end the use of waivers for countries to import oil from Iran in an attempt to end all oil exports from that country," said Mary Maguire, director of Public and Legislative Affairs. "Decreases in Iranian exports could tighten supply in the global market, though that could be balanced by increased U.S. production."

The range in prices in the latest AAA survey for unleaded regular is 58 cents, from a low of $2.47 to a high of $3.05. AAA advises motorists to shop around for the best prices in their area, and to make sure they and their passengers buckle up — every time.

It's Time For Big Pharma To Pay The Bill, Take Back Unused Meds

Saturday Is National Drug Take Back Day

OP ED

By JOHN F. KEENAN
State Senator

On Saturday, April 27, cities and towns across the Commonwealth will participate in National Drug Take Back Day, an annual event organized by the Drug Enforcement Agency to help people safely dispose of unwanted, unused, and expired prescription medication at local law enforcement stations. As Massachusetts continues to cope with a crippling opioid epidemic, this day serves as a reminder that preventing addiction is a battle fought on multiple fronts.

Last April on National Drug Take Back Day, 161 participating locations across the state collected 27,126 pounds of prescription drugs, more than the total number of pounds collected in New Hampshire, Connecticut, and Rhode Island combined on that day. The massive amount of drugs collected last year underscores the importance of Saturday's efforts, but also calls attention to the need for well-funded, easily accessible, and year-round drug stewardship programs.

In 2016, Massachusetts became first in the nation to pass legislation that required a statewide drug stewardship program. The goal of this plan was simple: make it easier for people to dispose of unused pills and shift the financial burden of funding these programs from local budgets to pharmaceutical companies. In short, make those responsible for the opioid epidemic pay to clean up their own mess.

Although this legislation passed in 2016, this program is just getting off the ground now. For two years, while some companies embraced this effort, many dragged their feet to delay the program. Furthermore, the 2016 law was amended to include a "sunset clause," meaning that if the Legislature and the Governor don't act quickly to change the law as it stands, this new statewide program will end in 2021, before it will have any significant impact. This is why I have filed Senate Bill 1149, An Act Strengthening Prescription Drug Safety and Drug Stewardship. This bill would make the obligation of pharmaceutical companies to take back unused medications permanent.

Pills sitting in medicine cabinets, dresser drawers, and other locations around the house pose major risks to you, your loved ones, and house guests like your kids' friends. Six million people misused prescription drugs in 2017 and four out of five heroin users report having first started with prescription opioids. We have lost 2,000 lives to this crisis in each of the last three years and all too often, those first pills are from bottles labeled with the names of family members and friends.

For years, pharmaceutical companies aggressively pushed products for profit, making millions and propelling entire generations into addiction in the process. It's time for them to pay the bill and commit to taking back unused medications.

John F. Keenan represents the Norfolk and Plymouth District in the MA State Senate.

$2.2 Million Approved For Patrol Officers' Raises

By SCOTT JACKSON

The City Council on Monday night unanimously appropriated $2.23 million for retroactive pay raises for patrol officers in the Quincy Police Department.

Chris Walker, the chief of staff for Mayor Thomas Koch, said the city had entered into binding arbitration with the Quincy Police Patrolmen's Association relative to collective bargaining for fiscal years 2016 through 2020.

The arbitration panel, Walker said in a memo to city councillors, awarded the union wage increases identical to those received by the city's 16 other bargaining units over the same period. It reflects a total increase of 7 percent over the first four fiscal years, with a final 3 percent adjustment for fiscal year 2020, which starts July 1.

The money approved Monday covers the first four first years, Walker said.

The $2.23 million was appropriated from the city's state-certified free cash. Ward 3 Councillor Ian Cain, the chairman of the council's finance committee, said some $640,000 remained in free cash following the appropriation.

The city had set aside funds for the police raises in the past four budgets. Under state law, Walker said that money dropped into free cash and then the city's rainy day fund after it was not appropriated.

HERE IS A PLEASANT LITTLE GAME that will give you a message every day. It's a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner and check one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

HOLLYWOOD

by Tony Rizzo

HOLLYWOOD -- Tom Hanks has a couple of big roles coming up, starring as Mr. Rogers in "A Beautiful Day in the Neighborhood," with Wendy Makkena, Matthew Rhys and Chris Cooper (out Nov. 22), then transforming himself into Colonel Parker, the manager of "The King of Rock and Roll" Elvis Presley, for director Baz Luhrmann. Among Luhrmann's hit films are "Moulin Rouge" (2001), "Australia" (2008) and "The Great Gatsby" (2013). He recently completed the Netflix series "The Get Down," about the birth of hip-hop, and you can be sure this Elvis film will be like no other. Meanwhile, the release of Hanks' war film "Greyhound," with Elisabeth Shue, has been pushed back to May 2020.

Denzel Washington will next take on the title role of a Scottish lord in William Shakespeare's "Macbeth," aided and abetted by "Three Billboards" Oscar-winning best actress Frances McDormand as Lady MacBeth.

Chris Hemsworth has landed another franchise with the reboot of "Men In Black: International," co-starring Rebecca Ferguson, Liam Neeson and Emma Thompson, dropping June 14, and "Dhaka," about a mercenary hired to rescue a Bangladeshi businessman's kidnapped son.

Benedict Cumberbatch, now starring as Doctor Strange in "Avengers: Endgame," is going to war as Greville Wynne in "Iron Bark," with "Mrs. Maisel" Rachel Brosnahan, a Cold War drama about two businessmen who aid the CIA in penetrating the Soviet nuclear program. That's followed by "1917," in which he and Colin Firth are two young soldiers during World War I. Sam Mendes (Kate Winslet's ex) is directing for a Christmas Day opening.

Patrick Schwarzenegger, son of Arnold, stars as the imaginary friend of a troubled college freshman in the thriller "Daniel Isn't Real," with Mary Stewart Masterson. The film screened last month at The South by Southwest Film Festival and is looking for a distributor. Patrick is now filming the sci-fi thriller "Warning," with "Magic Mike" star Alex Pettyfer.

Meryl Streep has completed the reboot of "Little Women," as Aunt March, with Saoirse Ronan, Timothee Chalamet, Laura Dern and Emma Watson (due Christmas Day), and Netflix's "The Laundromat," which Steven Soderbergh is directing, with Gary Oldman, Antonio Banderas, Alex Pettyfer, Will Forte and David Schwimmer. It's about a group of journalists who unearth 11.5 million files linking the world most powerful figures to secret bank accounts as they attempt to avoid paying taxes. From "Little Women" to big tax dodgers. Sounds like D.C. today!

The idea of Go Figure is to arrive at the figures given at the bottom and right-hand columns of the diagram by following the arithmetic signs in the order they are given (that is, from left to right and top to bottom). Use only the numbers below the diagram to complete its blank squares and use each of the nine numbers only once.

KOVELS Antiques & Collecting

By Terry and Kim Kovel

Tiffany Lamp --- Mention Tiffany and collectors may think of the very different things made by Louis Comfort Tiffany. He was so talented that it is almost impossible to know everything he did. He was a popular designer and creator of glass, pottery, jewelry, windows, lamps and even houses, rooms and gardens for many years, then fell out of favor less than 10 years after he died. But today, everything he did is back in style.

Charles Lewis Tiffany, Louis Tiffany's father, started a jewelry store in 1837 that still is in business with the name Tiffany & Company. Louis Comfort Tiffany (1848-1933) started his own business in 1879 and named it Louis Comfort Tiffany and Associated American Artists (1879-1902). He also was a decorator for his father's company in the early 1900s. The name was changed to Tiffany Studios after his father died in 1902, and he became vice president. L.C. Tiffany usually signed his name on his famous iridescent glass instead of the Tiffany Studios company name. He also signed his name on his paintings and sketches.

The jewelry and clocks he designed were made by and signed Tiffany & Company. The Tiffany Glass Company made the glass for the windows and lamps, but many of the windows were never signed. And Tiffany couldn't sign the houses and gardens he designed or decorated, even major decorating jobs at the White House, the Presidential Palace in Cuba and his own homes. Many metal and glass desk sets, paperweights, candlesticks, bookends, glass scarabs and other small objects also were made. Today's collectors and art buyers want anything with any of the many Tiffany marks, and some -- like the best lamps -- sell for over $100,000. The record price for a Tiffany lamp is $2,807,500.

Q: How much is my Brownie 8 movie camera worth? It's marked "Kodak limited London." The camera has an F 2.7 lens. I also have the instruction booklet and leather shoulder carrying case.

A: Kodak introduced the Brownie 8mm movie camera in 1951. The camera was exported to England in 1955 and made in England beginning in 1956. It was a low-priced movie camera. It was advertised for $44.50 in a 1951 pre-Christmas ad. Its value today is very low, often below $30.

Using the digits above, can you find two 5-digit numbers that will produce the largest product?

Each digit may be used once and only once.

Strange BUT TRUE

* It was American actress, screenwriter and notorious sex symbol Mae West who made the following sage observation: "You only live once. But if you do it right, once is enough."

* The world's highest tides are found in the Bay of Fundy, located in Nova Scotia, Canada. There, the difference between high and low tides can be as much as 50 feet.

* If you're a blood donor, you're part of a significant minority. In the United States, less than 5 percent of the population donates blood every year.

* The first sound recording ever made was created in 1877 by Thomas Edison. It was a musical selection: "Mary Had a Little Lamb."

* Cars weren't allowed on the island of Bermuda until 1948.

* What's in a name? Well, a great deal, it would seem -- at least according to those trying to make it big in Hollywood. Joan Crawford was born Lucille La Sueur, Roy Rogers was Leonard Slye and Dean Martin was Dino Crocetti. Issur Danielovitch (wisely) changed his name to Kirk Douglas, and Archibald Leach decided he preferred to become famous as Cary Grant.

* Are you a cacographer? You may not be, but if you spend any time at all online you've certainly run across a few. A cacographer is someone who can't quite grasp the rules of spelling.

* Nobel Prize-winning Russian author Boris Pasternak wrote the novel "Doctor Zhivago" (later famously adapted to film). When the book was first published in 1957, in Italy, it earned great acclaim. However, it was decades before Pasternak's countrymen could legally read it -- the book wasn't allowed to be published in the Soviet Union until 1988.

Now here's a tip!

by Jo Ann Derson

* Do your kids love to have fruit cups in their lunchbox? They are a great snack, especially packed in juice, but I don't like the waste of materials or the cost. Instead, I use reusable screw-top containers that I fill each week from a large can. The price per serving is way less, and I'm not adding more little plastic cups to the mass already out there.

* J.F. writes: "If you're old like me, put a list of your medications on the fridge to aid the paramedics. Important phone numbers, too." Too true, J.F. I would add that if you are on a number of medications, keep a list in your wallet or handbag as well. It could come in handy when you are at a medical appointment, or just want to review with your pharmacist.

* Keep a washrag sprayed with cleaner handy when cooking spaghetti sauce. It's easier to clean up spills as they happen than to try to get dried sauce off the backsplash.

* "I have a bright spot lamp in my laundry room so that I can look over shirts to make sure I have treated all the stains. I don't have great lighting in the laundry room, and the LED light really makes spots stand out." -- R.Y. in Arkansas

* "Use flat, wide rubber bands around your mason jars as a bumper to avoid glass-on-glass clanging. You can even write on the band to use them for labels. I bought a pack of very fat rubber bands for cheap at the office supply store, and they are perfect." -- E.M.W. in Oregon

* Cold water wash all your clothes that can stand it -- especially jeans and dark clothing. It preserves the color, and that's in addition to being better on your pocketbook since it takes less energy.
